THE WORST OF A COLD.

THE WORST OF A COLD. Is how suddenly it comes. No time to hurry to the drug store, croup develops, the lungs are effected with pneumonia or tuperculosis, and it's too late. Keep Catarrhozone on hand—it kills colds instantly. Something magical about the way it cures Catarrh and Bronehitis. Catarrhozone is the beat remedy because it cures in nature's way: it heals, soothes and restores permanently. Carry a Catarrhozone inhaler in your pocket, use it occasionally and you'll never catch cold—that's worth remembering.

Origin of a Colloquialism.

The last word in the phrase "to rule the roast" (or its variant, "roost") was originally "roist"—i.e., noise, turnuit, rioi; hence "roysterer," a boisterous person. To "rule the roist" was to have control of disorderly assemblages.

A FAMILY NECESSITY. It's remedy capable of affording immediate relief to the hundred and one ailments that constantly arise. It may be a cold, perhaps toothache, neuroligia, pain in the back,—use Polson's New line, it is penetrating, pain subdains and occurriul. Nerviline is at leas five times stronger than ordinary remedies and its worth in any household can't be over-eastimated. For man or beast Nerviline is a panacea for all pain and costs only 25c, per bottle. Buy Nerviline today from your draggist.

THE HOMES OF ENGLAND

DESCRIPTION OF THEIR BEAU-TIES AND HISTORIES.

Silent Witnesses of Great and Historic Long Gone Scenes in the Making of the British Nation - Lordly Penhurst Place — Noble Old Mansion of Haddon—Romantic Pile of Cawder Castle-Family Romances

It is a wonderful thing to see how It is a wonderful thing to see how the glamor of glories departed, the shadow of old tragedy, the memory of the great and gentle dead, cling despite the lapse of time about this buildings that knew them—silent witnesses of all long gone scenes. There is always, about the rooms, the gardens, the very streets and squares, which some bygone footstep has made sacred to us, that sort of mental hush, that thrill, that quickening of the pulses which tell us that the spot whereon we tread is "haunted, holy ground." Halls where knights and ladies footed it in good old fashion, gardens whose moaning doves but echo all the passion and the pain of bygone lovers, moats and dungeons echo all the passion and the pain of bygone lovers, moats and dungeons gloomy with recollection of feudal war and feudal tyranny, red with blood and black with midnight crime! Over such spots one might rhapsodize for ever, more for the magic and mystery of old association than the stately porticoes and colonnades, the gilt, the marble, the moslac, which may make the most costly of palaces, but not of necessity a home.

The Home of the Sidneys. Possibly the ideal English home is the ordly Penhurst Place, rich in natural and artificial beauty, in historic memand artificial beauty, in historic memories, in modern ease and comfort. Few dwellings can boast so long and so brilliant a host of bygone dwellers and sojourners as this fair mansion on the Kentish weald. First and foremost, of course, comes the chivalrous and gentle Sir Philip Sidney, whose portrait as a slim, fair, thoughtful-looking lad still hangs on the gallery walls of Penhurst. Here also are to be seen the counterfeit presentments of Queea Elizabeth, one a familiar portrait in full court array and with wide ruff, the other showing Her Majesty stepping out right gally in the dance with her favorite, the Earl of Lelcester.

In latter days the great patriot, Alher favorite, the Earl of Leicester.

In latter days the great patriot, Algernon Sidney, passed here some years of comparative peace ere he was exiled to America. It was, indeed, under this roof that a considerable part of the constitution of Pennsylvania was framed, by Algernon Sidney and William Penn himself.

The present holder of the estates, Lord de L'Isle and Dudley, it is unnecessary to say, keeps the antique pile in a state well befitting its ancient grandeur, and the glorious cedars under whose boughs the poet Waller composed his songs to the fair "Sacharissa," still keep their stately watch over the fair fields of Kent.

Haddon Hall.

Haddon Hall.

It is very often the case that some It is very often the case that some popular literary masterplece has been the means of sitracting hosts of tourists, especially of the transatiantic variety, to spots otherwise little known to the general public. Such is the case with the noble old mansion of Haddon, the scene of the romantic love story of the immortal Dorothy Vernon.

Haddon is perhaps the most perfect example left to us of an old baronial hall; its history is unstained by records example left to us of an old baronal hall; its history is unstained by records of feudal bloodshed, of sieges, sorties and plundering raids. The wide mullioned windows, the hospitable doors, the long peaceful terraces, tell their own tale of easy, open-handed English country life. The owner, the Duke of Rutland, wisely throws open his noble heirloon to the countless tourists who heirloom to the countless tourists who know Haddon from Scott's famous tale and from Landseer's and Cattern ous pictures of Haddon in the

Dorothy Vernon's Romance. The fair and wilful helress who brought the house and lands of Had-don into the family of the present don into the family of the present owner was the daughter of Sir George Vernon, "The King of the Peak," who did indeed keep almost kingly pomp and wield well-nigh regal power in his realm in Derbyshire.

His beautiful daughter Dorothy, set he rheart, as maidens will, on one John Mariners, a son of the first Duke of Rutland—by no means the wealthy match that her family had hoped to arrange for so beautiful and popular a girl. After the drastic fashion of the times, Mistress Dorothy was placed under the strictest guard, and forbidden to have any communication with the undesired suitor. But a judicious appearance of dutiful submission to sleep. No one suspected the fair Dorothy's lover in his disguise of a humble woodmain on the domains of Haddon.

During the progress of a masnificent othys lover in his disguise of a humble woodman on the domains of Haddon.

During the progress of a magnificent ball in connection with the marriage of her elder sister, Margaret, Dorothy Vernon slipped away unnoticed to her faithful lover, who waited for her by the Dorwent, which flows close to the hall. Joyfully the young levers galloped away through the night, and the morning saw them made man and wife. Such is the story of Dorothy Vernon, and fortunately it has no sorrowful sequels, as was so often the case with runaway marriages of lawless days. The "King of the Peak," like a sensible man, seems to have made the best of his defeat, and allowed his wayward daughter to enjoy undisturbed her hard won happiness.

The former splendors of Haddon may be partly realized by some details of the household expenditure in the year 1563, when we are told there were consumed between thirty and forty beeves, some four or five hundred sheep, and eight to ten swins. Seven score of men and maids were employed to keep up the appearance of the manufon under the first Duke of Rutland.

Cavedor Castle.

Caydor Castle.

The romantic pile of Caydor Castle is still, despite the statements of sceptical bistorians, generally believed to be the scene of the murder of the luckless King Dunean by the Thane Macbeth. Probably few buildings in the island are so rich in legendary and historic interest as this weird Scottish mansion, standing hard by Cuiloden Moor, where the grass grows green over two or three long mounds where

A visit to Cawdor is like a peep into the days of old. The owners have taken a commendable pride in preserving the simple and impressive strength of the castle; with the result that but the castle; with the result that but little old and historic work has been "improved" out of existence. The oldest part of the building is the mighty keep, eight yfeet in height, which was built up to its present height by Thane William so long ago as 1454. In the william so long ago as 1454. In the grim dungeon is to be seen the trunk of the ancient hawthorn tree which is supposed to have decided the site of of the ancient hawthorn tree which is supposed to have decided the site of the castle. The story runs that the founder, resolving to seek occult aid in making his decision, strapped all his wealth upon an ass' back, and vowed to build his fortress wherever the beast should choose to lie down and rest. This it did under the hawthorn tree in question, and hence comes the time.

should choose to lie down and rest. This it did under the hawthorn tree in question, and hence comes the time-honored toast still quarted in the house of Cawdor: "Freshness to the hawthorn and prosperity to the line of Cawdor."

Macbeth and Duncan.

The only entrance to the interior of the castle is by the drawbridge which still hangs over the ancient most, now partly filled in. Up a winding stair in the great tower is reached on the second floor "King Duncan's room," where are shown the King's suits, of mail, and where formerly was kept the very bed on which the blow was said to have been dealt by the treacherous hand of Macbeth. The walls of the tower are no less than nine fest in thickness. With is conical turrets and high-pitched roof, the keep is a typical example of Scottish feudal architecture. As regards the association with King Duncan and Macbeth, we may take it or leave it, as we are inclined to be aceptical or otherwise. At any rate, most people agree with the monarch's view according to Shakespeare.

This castle hath a pleasant seat; the of Shakespeare's Duncan, with whom after all the modern world has most to do.

In latter days another famous personage linked his name with the antique walls of Cawdor. On the roof above the entrance staircase is shown a secret chamber wherein lay hidden after Culioden the notorious Lord Lovatt, who afterwards ended on the scaffold his adventurous and profligate career.

Another reputed scene of Duncan's murder is the Castle of Glamis, the abode of what is perhaps the most renowned of modern mysteries. Everyone is acquainted with the fact of some strange secret known to the owner of the castle and one or two others, and the legend affords matter for much idle speculation among those fond of dabbling in occultism. But of family shost stories, were one to allow one's pen bling in occultism. But of family ghost stories, were one to allow one's pen to stray into that Province, there would be no end. The seeker after details of such things will and them as a rule in the records of almost all of the an-cient British homes.

Too Much For the Cook. He was a new waiter in a down-town restaurant, and after he had waited on a man who was seated at one ed on a man who was seated at one of the tables the other noon he went behind the cold lunch counter to eat his own dinner. Presently he dropped down from his stool and whistled up the tube to the cook on the second floor. "Where's that pie I ordered?" he asked, "Hurry it up." The cook's reply could not be heard. He was evidently a suspicious cook, and he provoked the new waiter. The volley the voked the new waiter. The volley the latter fired into the tin funnel sounded like a bunch of firecrackers going off in a barrel. "Heavens!" he spluttered.
"Did you think I wanted it for myself? I haven't been here long, but I've seen your pies. I haven't been disappointed in love, and I haven't got any domestic troubles. When I'm desperate, I'll take something easier to swallow than one of your pies. There's a customer here waiting for it. He's ne friend of mine or I'd switch him off on to crackers and cheese. You'll know me bet-ter if I don't get discharged." The pie came down with a rattle, and the new waiter resumed his meal.—Providence Journal.
