

would be wrong to ship as apples because the honey rate is higher than that of apples, but it would be right to ship as honey for the same reason that you are paying as much and more than for either sent separately. We have known or have heard of honey having been sent along with a carload of apples or with a carload of live stock, but this is all wrong and an injustice to those who believe in dealing honestly with corporations as with individuals. In shipping comb honey in barrels I would not label it as such nor have any directions as to how to load in a car. Bill it as honey in barrels and say no more. The same also with bottled honey. It is better to let well alone, and for this reason I would take the tariff as it reads and not ask for any investigation, or say anything that may give rise to a change, that may include honey in glass or comb honey as 1st class no matter how packed. The difference between 1st and 2nd class is considerable when shipping long distances. If any who bottle honey find a barrel too large, then use a keg which goes same rate, or make up an assorted barrel of bottles and tins including comb honey and get the advantage of a 2nd class rate.

QUEENS YOU SHOULD HAVE

Does blood tell in other stock ??? Give your bees a chance. Stock used for breeding the queens offered—no from a sport—but my pick out of an apiary giving last season an average yield as follows:—

Honey Gathering:

102 lbs. Extracted } Honey per Colony
68 lbs. Comb }

Quality of Comb Honey Produced:

"Man! It would dazzle you."—WM. McEVEN
Ont. Gov. Inspector of Apiaries.

Wintering Qualities:

"Up to the present (Jan. 30th) I never found these bees to show the least indication of unrest, always perfectly quiet. They wintered perfectly."—FRANK. P. ADAMS.

General Commendation:

"Out of those queens sent me I have produced the best race or strain of bees I ever owned. Remember that is saying a lot as I have had every breed imported to this country. My bees winter better, build up and stand up to chilly winds in spring better, and are more suitable than any bees I ever owned. For this season they gave me about double the honey the Pure Italians did, and more increase. If you are going into the queen business and are going to join our ranks again. We are in need of a few men like you."—C. W. BROWN (owner 365 colonies) Ex-Pres. Ontario Beekeepers' Assn.

S. T. PETTIT, Canada's most successful honey producer and bee keeper, says: "The blood in my apiary is largely the product of the queens sent by you; they are grand bees."
