"Give me a quart of yolks." "What are whites worth today?"

"Send me up a gallon of mixed." Such expressions as these will be familiar terms in grocery stores and butcher shops in Kansas City before long. Housewives will make them so, for eggs will be sold by the pint, quart and gallon instead of by the dozen. In fact, the big confectionery establishments of the city buy them by the galion now. Kitchen economy suggested the scheme, and local packers immediately took it up.

Poor Bob!

There is no joy in this world equal to the happiness of motherhood. A woman's health is her dearest possessession. Good looks, good times, happiness, love and its continuance, de-pend on her health. Almost all of the piness, love and its continuance, depend on her health. Almost all of the sickness of women is traceable directly or indirectly to some derangement of the organs distinctly feminine. Troubles of this kind are often neglected because a very natural and proper modesty keeps women away from physicians, whose insistence upon examination and local treatment is generally as useful as it is common. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will do more for them than 99 doctors in 100. It will do more than the hundredth doctor can unless he prescribes it. It is a prescription of Dr. R. V. Pierce, who for 30 years has been chief consulting physician of the World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel, at Buffalo, N. Y.

DAWN OF MOTHERHOOD

The Word "Mamma" to the foung W

Has a New and Sacred "One thing is certain," an affiance maid announced, with decision, on the eve of her wedding. "My husband shall never call me Mamma." He may call me Clara, or Mrs. Richards, or even 'Say,' but I shall never be cailed 'Mamma.' It is a horrid, impersonal name"

We mammas who heard her only smiled, and answered nothing at all, for each of us remembered that she was young, and that there were many many things that she did not know. She did not know that when the sweetheart had changed to the wife and the wife to the mother, 'there comes a wondrous first time. That first time that she feels the downy head nestling under her chin; that first time that she feels the restless pat, pat of little feet as she vainly tries to prison them in her hand, she learns then that her life has burst into a new and wonderful fulness. In her neart there is kindled the fire of love, and the incense that arises from it glorifies the whole atmosphere, and the warmth envelops her and her baby in an everlasting mantle. Then in the the one that she loves best of all, and she reaches out her hand to him to draw him near, that he, too, may come within the enchanted circle; that he too, may breathe the sacred incense, and be warmed by the heavenly fire. Laying his hand in hers they look together into the new little face, but no word comes to express the strange sweet feelings that are surging through them both until, bending close to her,

he softly whispers, "Mamma."

It is a baptism. All the sweet, intangible things that have been filling her being have been caught and held in that word. The world may teem with mammas, but the name to her has a new and sacred meaning. Other names have been given her; other promises have been made in the giving and in the taking, but nothing so tender, so strong, so sweet as this, and her whole being goes out in a silent promise to live up to the sacredness of that name.-Woman's Home Companion.

An Evening Call,

He who best knows how to propitiate the mother of his best girl has the battle more than half won. This has to do with a bungler in the line referred to. He called at the pretty house on National avenue and made the mis take of trying to entertain the mother instead of allowing the mother to entertain him while waiting for the girl, who had not completed her toilet.

"What are the three latest methods of rapid communication?" he asked very early in their conversation. She gave it up and he glibly said: "Tele-graph, telephone and tellawoman." That she was indignant appeared in the fact that she did not laugh and went on to tell what a revival of old jokes there had been of late. But he never twigged and continued to be "smart."

The mother determined to be watchful The daughter came and the mother excused herself, only to find a seat in the back parlor. She had taken a dislike to the youth and was on duty.

The baby of the household came in, and, as a matter of course, toddled right to the corner occupied by sister and her "steady." Full five minutes mamma sat in alert silence. and then baby chirped: "Tiss me, too, sister."

Sister always has her head, and at "Baby should not say "Kiss me two, say 'Kissame twice." But the mother is not easily hoodwinked. She smiled grimly as she walked into the parlor and said that baby was quite too young to take lessons in grammar. Then she sat down and coldly chaperoned the couple until the smart young man left.-Detroit Free Press.

FREDERICK AND THE DRAMA. Among the many arts and sciences which have received encouragement from Frederick the Great, there is not one, which owes more to this monarch than the drama. From his earliest boyhood his love for the stage was most marked, so much so, that his father, Frederick I., feared the future of his son would be an actor instead King of Prussia his association with Voltaire rekindled the fire of his youthful ambition and it was a common occurrence at Potedam to see Frederick the Great and bie sister Amelia participate in the trial per-formance of some of Voltaire's composi-

Frederick was a very poor actor, but an excellent musician, so very frequent ly to avoid making a complete fisseo of a performance and yet not offend his sensitive majesty, Voltaire interpolated flute solos so as to permit the musical effort to counteract the dramatic. In the opening act of "Frederick the Great," as presented by Lewis Morrison, a state concert is about to be given in which Frederick contributes a musical selection. Mr. Morrison has devoted many days to the study of this one effort, which is said to be exceptionally clever. At the Grand Opera House Wednesday, Feb. 14th.
