E. & D. BICYCLES

The great reason for the goodness of E. & D. bearings lies in their four-point design. The load passes directly through the balls, and there is no opportunity for the balls to jam.

In E. & D. four-point bearings the weight on any one point in the bearing. weight on any one point in the bearing is never more than 1-8th of the weight of the rider. In ordinary bicycles, the immense leverage between cup and cone bearings and cone cuts the bearings and breaks the balls.

To show how little the wear on E, &

D. four-point bearings is, we first guarantee them for three years, and, secondly, we oil them at the beginning of the season, and at the end, upon examination, the oil will be found clear.

E. & D. bearings are excellent.
In all parts, the four-point sysetm is employed. In 1900 E. & D. models, even the head bearings are equipped with four-point bearings.

O give me the joy of living, And some glorious work to do; A spirit of thanksgiving, With loyal heart and true Some pathway to make brighter, Where tired feet now stray; Some burden to make lighter While 'tis day.

O give me the joy of living, In the world where God lives, too; And the blessed power of giving, Where men have so much to do: Let me strive where men are striving, And help them up the steep;-May the trees I plant be thriving While I sleep.

On the fields of the Master gleaning, May my heart and hands be strong; Let me know life's deepest meaning, Let me sing life's sweetest song;-With some faithful hearts to love me. Let me nobly do my best; And, at last, with heaven above me,

Let me rest. -(The Rev. Julian S. Cutter.

*********** THE POSTMAN'S STORY.

Yes, sir; I have carried the Barnborough mail for thirty years, seldom missing a day. Hard work? You are right, sir. In and out of Redhill twice a day, winter and summer, in all wea-thers. Half an hour's walk to Barnborough Station from the town, and a delivery round of more than five miles. I have to tramp over twenty miles, sunshine or rain, every day but Sunday.

But in these times I am only too glad of the work, and thankful to our young postmaster for keeping me on

Yes, I see a great deal of other people's joys and sorrows, too, as I go from house to house. I have seen many a bright eye grow brighter, and red lips smile sweetly, at the sight of familiar handwriting; and I am always glad to be the bearer of good But I have seen a pale face grow slowly paler, and lips quiver piti-fully, and sometimes a flood of tears, which could not be repressed, at the sight of a blackbordered envelope.

But, to my way of thinking, the saddest of all is when one watches, and waits, and looks eagerly for the letter which never comes. It seems to me a great deal easier

o bear a sorrow or affliction when we know just what it is going to be, and just how much of a burden we have to bear; but, sir, it is the suspense-the not knowing-that kills.

You see that house over vonderthat pretty white cottage wih the lilac trees in front? Well, I was witness to a romance which was enacted there a couple of years ago-just as romantic as any novel that I ever heard of. But, then, "truth is stranger than fiction" sometimes, you know.

A widow lady, Mrs. Wilson, lived there—a refined, genteel old lady and her daughter, Miss Bessie. taught in Barnborough Church School -a hard, dreary life that must be. I had met the young lady frequently coming to and from the school-house, and had thought what a cheerful, pretty little thing she was. delicate-looking girl, with a fair complexion, and such brown, earnest yes-they seemed to look through you and read your thoughts. and make a man feel like trying to live better. Every morning, when she came down the gravel walk to the gate, on her way to the school, she was almost certain to see me, and she would wait until I came, and bid me good morning so sweetly, and ask carelessly if there were any letters for them. But they seldom received

One evening I saw Miss Bessie walking with a gentleman. I knew him a little. His name was John Keen, and he occupied some position in connec-tion with the General Post Office Police Inquiry Department. I knew that the authorities at St. Martin's-le-Grand spove very highly of him, and that he was a great favorite; and the future looked bright enough for young Keen.

And I was glad when I found that he often went down at nights from his lodgings-which were a mile or so on the way to London and Brighton Station-to the cottage, for I had somehow grown strangely interested

One day I heard that John Keen had been selected by the heads of the service to go out to Ireland to fully investigater some irregularities which had occurred in the post-offices in the Ulster district. I was glad of it, for I felt sure he would get to the bottom of the matter. He seemed so clever at ferreting out things.

I did not see Miss Bessie for a whole week after that; but one morning, there she was, standing at the gate, awaiting my approach, her face pale and anxious.

"Any letters?" she cried, cagerly as soon as she had said good morning. I knew that there was, for I had noticed a large square envelope ad-dressed to her in a bold, handsome hand, with the postmark Londonderry. I was not long in delivering it, and oh!

the look she gave!
After that I used to bring her a letter with that same postmark every week; and she always looked so contented and happy that when, at last, one morning, I drew near the Wilsons' gate, and saw the slim, neatly-dressed figure awaiting me, I hesitated to approach, for I knew that I had no let-

A shade of wistful sadness fell over her face as I said, as cheerily as I could—"No letter to-day, Miss Bessie"; and could not helping adding, "maybe it will come to-morrow.' She smiled sweetly.

"Oh, yes, it will come to-morrow," she cried; and as I hurried on I said to myself, "I hope it will." But I have seen so much parting and never meeting an more on this earth, or meeting like rangers, which is worse, you see, t somehow I feared worse, you see, f t somehow I terred all was over between them. There was no letter the next day, or the next, and so on for days and days. Miss Bessie was always at her post, but she grew so thin and pale that I hardly knew her; and I would just shake my head and hurry by, and so she realized that there was no hope. One day, as I was passing the cottage I saw a messenger boy from the telegraph-office standing at the gate. Then Miss Bessie ran quickly down the walk, and just as I came up she seized the brown envelope and tore it

Such a look on her white face! Such a heart-broken cry! Then she tottered a step forward and fell to the ground like one dead. I could not help seeing the telegram; it was like all such messages—brief and to the point. They know how to stab the poor heart through. This was the message-"John Keen was drowned three days ago in Lough Foyle.'

That was what it said; and my heart bled for the poor girl lying there, white and still. I rang the bell and her mother came out. Miss Bessie was restored to consciousness, and pale as a ghost, walked into the house, leaning upon his mother's arm; but you could see that all the light had gone out of her life.

Mrs. Wilson wrote at once to the man who had sent the telegram, requesting particulars, and soon receiv ed a reply stating that Mr. Keen had been missing for some time, was last seen in a boat on the Lough, and finally a body had been washed up near Coleraine, so mutilated as not to admit of identification; but in a pocket card had been found bearing a name which looked like "J. Keen," but was almost erased by the water. When I saw Miss Bessie again she looked as if she was not long for this One day I found in my bag a large, business looking letter addressed to Mrs. Wilson; and soon they told me the good news which it contained. A relative had died leaving them four or five hundred pounds; and I think that was as g'ad as they were, for they

was dressed in deep mourning, and ecmed like old friends to me. Not long after, Mrs. Wilson decided o give up the cottage and take Miss Bessie to Brighton for a time, hoping o restore her health, which was falg rapidly. An impulse prompted me ask for their sesside address. We g t get a letter for them, when I uld wish to get it forwarded at nce, so they gave me the address of ging where they expected to remain for some weeks. One day, over a month after, as I was ras i g he cottage—I was still moccupied—I saw a gentleman's anding at the gate, and as I drew nearer my heart gave a great bound, and then food still, for, dead or alive, it was ohn Keen! He held out his hand in a friendly

"How are you. Mr. Jarvis?" he said Perhaps you can enlighten me as to the whereabouts of the lady-Mrs. Wilson-who lived here before I went to Ireland?" "But-but-" I stammered out; "are you really alive?" He looked at me as though he thought me an escaped lunatic. So then I began and told him everything. just as I have told it to you, sir. His face was quite white when my story was finished. "Poor Bessie!" I heard him whisper softly to himself. Then he turned to me.

"Mr. Jarvis," he said, 'let me tell you was sent away on a delicate mission. in the interests of the postal service, and it was necessary that my movements should be guarded and my investigations secretly conducted. And then I wrote to Bessie, explaining the situation, and telling her that she must not be surprised or troubled if she did not hear from me for a week as I had promised to communicate my movements to no one.

Two months afterwards I returned from the expedition—successful, too and I learned that the wagon with the mail-bags from the country town from which I had last written had been at-tacked, the driver killed, the mail robbed and all valuables, and the letters scattered to the four winds of heaven "When I reported myself to the Belfast Office, the authorities there were frightened half out of their wits, thinking me a ghost. For, as I had been obliged to keep my plans secret they knew little of my movements; and the body of a stranger, supposed to be an English gentleman, having been found off the coast, horribly mutilated and quite unrecognizable, they had come to the conclusion that the unfortunate individual was the missing inspecting official from St. Martin's-le-

"Perhaps they had some reason for the hasty decision, for a card bearing my name was found in one of his pockets. But I did not know before (I suppose they were afraid to tell me) that they had gone the leng h of telegraphing my death to Miss Wilson, whose address they must have found in my desk at the Londonderry office.

"But, thank heaven! it was all a mistake and here I am, safe and sound. Prosperous, too; for the Postmaster-General has recompensed me handsomely for my successful services; and with an increased salary I am free to marry as soon as the little woman is Wht a pleasure it was, to be sure, to telegraph at once to Miss Bessie, simply saying-"Good news! Come to Barnborough immediately."

And what a scene was that meeting! The wedding took place in good style, not long afterwards, for John would rot hear of being separated from Bessie again; and, what do you think?—I was the first to kiss the bride!

Nature has just one pigment on her pallette with which she produces all the marvellous tints of beauty, and that one pigment is the blood. The shell-like pink beneath the finger nails nails, the delicate rose of the cheek, the cherry ripeness of the lips, the irridescent brilliance of the eyes are all produced by the blood. Just as the permanence of a beautiful painting will depend upon the purity of the colors with which it is pointed, so the permanence of beauty depends on the purity of the blood. Paint, powder and cosmetics won't avail to preserve beauty, Beauty begins in the blood.
Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery a true beautifier, because it provides for nature that pure blood with which alone she can paint. The use of this medicine will cleanse the skin, heighten the complexion, brighten the eyes, and give to face and form that radiance of health which is the greatest tharm of beauty. KWANG-SU, THE EMPEROR

His Reign in China Nominally Cor in the Year 1862.

The Emperor of China is thirty years old. His reign nominally com-menced in 1862. The Empress Dowager as Regent ruled China until 188.), when the Emperor took the actual control of the government. He still has the appearance of a delicate youth. He is small and thin, pale and intellectuat looking. His eyes are large and black and his face smooth and hair-

The first audience at which he received the foreign Ministers, or those of them who attended, took place in 1891. The representatives of France and Russia refused to accept audience because the hall set apart for the ceremonial was not situated in the For-

Afterward in 1894 the Emperor consented to receive the foreign representatives in the Hall of Literary Glory in the Forbidden City.

On occasions of audience the Emperor is seated on a throne placed on a dais raised five steps above the floor, The foreign representative was not allowed until recently to ascend this dais. He now approaches close to the throne. Standing in front of it he read his address. The Emperor replied in a few words, which were received by Prince Kung or Prince Ching kneeling and afterward translated from Manchu.

The language of both speeches was formal. For instance, the Emperor expressed his great satisfaction and joy at the kind sentiments of the President of the United States which the Minister had conveyed to him and hoped the President was well. He then personally complimented the Minister on his having been fair and even-tempered in the transaction of business and expressed the hope that the relations of friendship between the two countries might daily become closer and more intimate and that each might enjoy tranquility and peace. After these remarks were translated to the legation interpreter and this functionary had translated them into English the Minister retired, bowing at each four steps, and the audience was over.

Except on these occasions no foreign Minister and no other foreigner except Prince Henry of Prussia has ever seen the Emperor. It was regard. ed at Peking as a very unnecessary piece of etiquette for the German Minister to require the Emperor to return in person the call of Prince Henry. The usages, customs and particularly the sacred isolation of the Emperor are regarded as parts of the constitution of the country. Every country has its methods and usages, and it is not deemed necessary or proper to demand their abrogation and the substitution of other methods in their place. The Emperor of Morocco, for instance, receives foreign envoys on horseback.

Shortly after his accession to the throne the Emperor became very anxions to learn English. He secured two teachers from the Tungwen College, which was presided over by our fellowcitizen, Dr. W. A. T. Martin. These Probably the happiest period in life most frequently is in middle age, when the eager passions of youth are for several hours. for several hours. At the beginning the Emperor took his lesson every day and faithfully wrote his exercises. There was a rush among the princes and Ministers to learn English also, and for a while the scheme was very flourishing, but soon zeal flagged and the scheme dropped.-Charles Denby.

No Man a Hero in a Nightmare. "Strange that we are always so owardly in nightmares," remarked a New Orleans lawyer who has a taste for the bizarre. "I don't believe anybody ever lived who stood up and made a square stand against the amorphous horror that invariably pursues us in such visions. When I have a nightmare and the usual monster gets on my trail my blood turns to water and my conduct would disgrace sheep. I am beside myself with stark, downright fear, and I have no idea left in my head except to run like a rabbit. All pride, self-respect, dread of ridicule and even the instinct of self-defence are scattered to the winds; and I believe, honestly, I would be capable of any infamy in order to escape. have no hesitation in confessing this because, as far as I have been able to find out, everybody acts exactly the same way in the throes of nightmare. and I feel certain I would not make such a pitiable spectacle of myself in real life, no matter what might befall,

"I think that the explanation of the nightmare panic is to be found in the fact that the dream is almost invariably accompanied by a sense of suf-focation. It is well established that choaking-the 'shutting off of one's wind,' to use a homely phrase-has an effect upon the mind which is entirely distinct and different from that produced by any other form of pain or peril. It fills the vict.m with such horror and distraction that he is for the moment insane. He will do any-thing to get relief. This has been brought out on more than one occasion in the defence of men who have been choked and killed their assailants, and Judges have held that the circumstances of such an attack should be given special consideration as extenuating the deed. In dreams the entire nervous system is relaxed, and it is natural to suppose that the mencal. effect of suffocation would be intensified. At least, that is the best apology have to offer for my sprints through nightmare land."-New Orleans Times-Democrat.
