NO MORE PAY FOR B. & M. EMPLOYEES

Boston, Nov. 12.—The 3,500 Boston & Maine machinists and men of allied crafts, who struck on September 4th for an increase in wages of 8 cents an hour and after being out a week returned to work with a conditional increase of 5 cents per hour, will not receive any further increase.

Henry B. Endicott, arbitrator, announced his decision last evening and says that after careful investigation he finds the present 5 cents an hour advance in wages previously awarded by him and accepted by both sides "fair and reasonable and I therefore award nothing more."

The 5 cents increase was given conditional upon their immediate return to work and he agreed to announce a finding relative to the other 3 cents after consideration of the case. By Mr. Endicott's decision the apprentices will also receive the 5 cents additional increase, this matter being in dispute.

These employees, Mr. Endicott finds, have received an advance in wages of 7 cents an hour, or about 26 per cent. advance on the average of the prior wages.

NOTHING

was capable of healing a bad running sore, from which my husband suffered, until he used Zam-Buk," writes Mrs. B. Ellis of Castleton, Ont. "The sore, which was on his foot and was caused by frost-bite, had penetrated to the bone. The pain he suffered from the inflammation was so bad that he could not sleep. He tried every remedy he had ever heard of nothing gave him relief until he tried Zam-Buk. Within two hours after the first application the pain was eased. With perseverance the inflammation was drawn out and the swelling reduced. The pain then entirely disappeared and soon the sore was completely healed."

THE ADVENTURES OF KITTY

They were too much engrossed at the last minute to notice a high-wheeled gig dash up to the station gate and deposit a passenger, who entered the train lower down just as it was starting.

There were three other passengers in the compartment, all more or less inclined to doze. Though deadly tired, Kitty had no inclination for sleep. Nor could she give a thought to the future. Not so soon could her mind and nerve recover from the strain and shock of the last two days.

After Carlisle, however, she found herself alone, and the solitude began to have a soothing effect. She lay back in her corner and closed her eyes. The great train—the dear, kind monster she had so often watched and longed to travel on—thundered out its miles southward, and at two in the morning slumber was not far from the exhausted girl.

Kitty gave a little sigh of content—and opened her eyes.

The door of the compartment slid back. Alec Symington entered.

CHAPTER VII.

A Friend in Need.

For a moment or two Kitty was terror-stricken. Then common-sense came to her aid. She was free; she was independent; the man might annoy her with his attentions, but he could not harm her. She sat up and met his smile with a grave look of inquiry.

"This is a pleasant surprise, Kitty," he said, seating himself directly opposite. "Rather a crowd in my part of the train, and I was hunting for a compartment with room to spare when fortune led me here," he lied. "Not often I'm so lucky."

Kitty made no response.

"You might have let me know you were going to make a journey," he said pleasantly, "but perhaps you decided on it since I saw you." He glanced at her things on the rack. "I see you are going all the way. Well, so much the better for me—eh? Come, Kitty, be friendly and say something."

"I have nothing to say, Mr. Symington."

"You're thinking of last night—or, to be exact, the night before last. Well, I'm glad of this chance of apologizing. I'm sorry I struck the postman, but I was made with the man for interfering, you know. I had something to tell you, Kitty, something I've wanted to tel you for a long time. . . . Well, are you going to forgive me?"

"You had better ask Sam that. You didn't hurt me—you only disgusted me. I think you should try to find a seat in another compartment." She was quite cool now. Indeed, she was not sorry to have the opportunity of humiliating him for Sam's sake.

At her words his face took on a dusky shade, but he asked quietly enough: "Is that quite fair, Kitty?"

"You have no right to my name." She turned to the window, let up the blind and sought to ignore him by peering out into the darkness; but if she thought thus to get rid of his company, or even silence him, she was mistaken.

"You are a very foolish little girl," he said presently. "Here you are, running away to London, where you haven't a friend—"

"Who told you that?" she demanded.

"Well, have you?"

"Yes!" It was true. She had suddenly remembered that Colin was there, not that she expected ever to meet him. But the inspiration served her purpose; Symington was taken aback.

"Then it is someone your uncle does not know of," he said sharply, and wished he had ont spoken, for she was quick to retort:

"So my uncle told you I was in the train, though you pretended to be surprised to see me! I may be foolish, Mr. Symington, but I'm not utterly stupid."

"You are—delightfully stupid," he returned, restraining his temper, "if you think I'm going to let you disappear into London before I have seen what your friend is like. London is a dangerous place, as you would know if you had ever shown your pretty face in it before. Now, don't get excited. Be reasonable—patient, if you like to call it that. I don't wonder at your running away from your awful relations and that dead-alive village, but what are you going to do in London?"

Kitty, now both angry and uneasy, did not reply.

"I don't mean to be impertinent," he went on, "but I can't help being aware that you have no money—or, at least, very little. Now, in London—"

"You needn't concern yourself whether I have money or not," she interrupted hotly. "You will force me to leave this—"

"Please—just a moment. I can't help concerning myself—no man could—in the circumstances. And as I happen to be a man who is in love with you—oh, you know it very well—"

She rose to take her things from the rack. It was certainly not a wise move. With a strange laugh he sprang up and caught her, prisoning her arms.

"Silly little girl," he whispered passionately, "to think you can be quit of me so easily! No, no! I've got you, and I mean to keep you. Don't struggle—it's no use. There!" He had her fast. They swayed together with the movement of the train. "Now listen, Kitty," he continued: "You'll like me better when you know me better. I'm not a bad sort, and I can give you things you've never dreamed of. Let's be friends for the present. I wont hurry you about the other thing." His voice sounded a little breathless. "In a [illegible] your friends is [illegible] but if not, you must let me look after you—show you where to stay, and so on. Leave everything to me. Well have a jolly good time while youre getting to know me—

Wrenching one of her hands free, she struck him in the face.

"You beast!

Doubtless the word stung more than the blow. A madness grew in his.

"I'll kiss you for that!" he cried—and let her go with a stifled curse. The girl sank into her corner, ruddy. The man sat down, ghastly.

The corridor door was drawn back by a young woman in rather fashionable attire. In her left hand she carried a "sevenpenny," a finger marking the place. Without a glance at either occupant she stepped in and, leaving the door open, seated herself beside it and began to read.

Kitty had again turned her face to the window, and soon the shameful glow faded, leaving her pale. The natural reaction came, and she wanted to cry. Symington's color, on the other hand, had risen. Once more he sat opposite looking hot and sulky. After a little while he produced a cigarette-case, but he put it back unopened. He would have given something for a newspaper, though it had been a week old. He was furious with the intruder, and now and then took a stealthy glance at her which might possibly have alarmed her had she observed it. Now and then, also, he took such a glance at Kitty, and at last discovered that she was on the [illegible] train. Confound it! she [illegible] scene.

"Look here, Kitty, it's all [illegible] he whispered, and surreptitiously put his hand on her elbow.

She started as if from pollution. "Can't you leave me alone?" she said under her breath. "I never want to see you again, but I'll hate you a little less, perhaps, if you go back to the compartment you came from—anywhere out of this."

Nettled, he replied "You may as well make up your mind that I'm going to se you start safe in London."

She drew away from him as far as possible and resumed her study of the darkness.

PAPERS SHOW SINN FEIN GROUP IN U. S.

New York, Nov. 12.—A man who is said to have posed as a priest when that role would best serve his ends is being sought by the Federal authorities as a result of information in three letters found among the effects of Thomas Welsh, a British subject, arrested here Sunday and believed to have been a messenger from leaders of the Sinn Fein movement in Ireland to their agents in the United States.

Federal officials today announced the letters indicate nation-wide ramification of Sinn Fein activities in this country. Names of persons in New York city and other parts of the United States are mentioned in the communications, it was said.

Papers found in the possession of Father Daly, sentenced to three months' imprisonment in Liverpool yesterday and suspected of complicity with Sinn Fein cativities, when considered in connection with those taken from Welsh, may render material assistance in identifying the American correspondents with Sinn Fein leaders in Ireland, officials believed.

DRUGGING CHILD TO CERTAIN DEATH

Parents Administering Deadly Drugs to Child Which Would Grow Up an Idiot.

(Special by The Daily Gleaner's leased wire.)

Chicago, Nov. 12.—Paul Hodzima, four years old, is being administered deadly drugs by his parents with the full knowledge that they will cause his death within two months.

The drugs are being given the little boy under instruction of Dr. Harry J. Haizledon, who declared the child is suffering from an extremely small head, impaired breathing and other incurable ailments, and would be a hopeless idiot if permitted to live.

"The child's mother has endured great mental agony since his birth, and if he lived the suffering eventually would kill her," said Dr. Haizlendon today. "She has had no rest for months because of the constant crying of the little one, who suffers intensely all the time.

"Some minor ailments might be cured by an operation, but it would not restore his mentality. The treatment I am directing will result in his death within two months.

"Opiates in the medicine prevent the child from suffering meantime. The parents agree with me fully, and are administering the medicine I give them.

"Thuanasia, or painless killing by drugs, relieves the pain and removes the horrors of death. The patient passes the dreamy existence of a lotus eater. Indian hemp and other milder drugs lessen a desire for food, and the patient passes into the next stage within a month."

Dr. Haizlendon became nationally famous through similar action in the "Baby Bollinger" case. He said today he has recommended the same treatment in a number of cases.

22,000,000 WASTED HIDES

American Paper Asks Why Pigs Are Not Skinned Before Curing

The high cost of shoes and other necessities that are made of leather is world-wide and is attributable in large part to sheer scarcity of material. Nor does the Federal Government's recent survey of the leather situation offer much hope of early relief. About the only hope, in fact, lies in the possible utilization of leather supplies hitherto neglected.

Which has given rise to the query: Why not skin the pigs before making them into bacon?

There is an old-fashioned idea that bacon and ham could not be cured properly without the 'rind" on, but science has discounted it and the exigencies of these times may work to banish it entirely. It is an erroneous one, just as is the idea—which is kept alive only by custom—that the porker must hang in the market stripped of his bristles, but not of his hide.

Pigskin's value for a variety of purposes is well recognized. And it is employed to a limited extent, but not a staple leather. Shoe manufacturers, however, are said to be seeking ways to utilize it in their business, and doubtless they would employ great quantities of it in place of cowhide and calfskin but for its scarcity.

That swine could be made a potential supply of leather is indicated by the United States Department of Agriculture's estimate that there are upwards of 70,000,000 of these animals on American farms today. Yet the output of pigskin leather is negligible. Federal statistics show that only at seven of the principal stockyards of the country last year more than 2,200,000 hogs were marketed. Yet all of that pigskin was wasted.

It was cured with the hams and bacon, ultimately to be skinned off in strips and thrown in with the garbe.—Parkersburg News, W. Va.
