The tone of Mr. John Bright's recent speech, he said, was remarkable Mr. Bright had gone as near as possible to recommending a Republic in England. In comparing the United States with the British Empire, he had pointed out that the wide extent of the latter was the only cause of weakness. The Chancellor asserted that the policy of the Government in Afghanistan was defence, not annexation. They wished Afghanistan to receive a government suitable to its population, so hat the country might form a barrier between India and any power that might encroach upon it. The Government, he said, would take measures to alleviate the distress in Ireland without an uprising of the population. While caring for the material prosperity of the Irish, the Gov-
