CHAPTER XXVII.

THE JOURNEY SOUTHWARD—THE LUNATIC

ASTLEY—A MEETING OF FRIENDS

For very many miles of the journey southward, George sat by himself on the top of the coach buried in thought, and heaven knows his materials for thought were neither scanty nor unimportant.

Not one of the many passengers who joined or left the coach at its different stages had such momentous facts to cogitate, such an experience to reflect upon, such exciting possibilities to anticipate. Within the last twelve hours or little more, what exciting, what dreadful, what intensely important events had crowded into his life, and that with such a rapidity that it had been impossible for him really to realize them, or allow his mind to dwell upon them.

Now, however, when seated in passive physical inaction, he had full opportunity for thought and wonder, for conjecture and inference, and for realising in some measure the horrors and dangers of the night, and his wonderful deliverance from them.

In the belief of Nathan Garrett and Captain Gibson, he was lying bruised and dead at the bottom of the shaft into which their murderous hand had thrown him. Why had they thus gone to the fullest stretch of human crime? His love for Lillias was his only offence, and it showed how monstrous that was in the eyes of her father, and how resolved he was to marry her to Duncan Balston, when, in order to remove George from his path, he hesitated not to render himself liable even to capital punishment, and bring the unspeakable guilt of murder on his soul.

As for Nathan Garrett, George had not been greatly shocked to find him concerned in murder, for he had considered him capable of the very worst of crimes. That the indignation of the youth was roused against his murderers need not be doubted; it was most natural that it should. Who could feel anything but wrathful stirring of soul against men who had done their utmost to cruelly and violently kill him? Yet George could not forget that Captain Gibson was Lillias' father, and, for her sake and for the love he bore her, he had forbearance towards him even in his heart.

It seemed that as the distance increased between him and Glenfask the thoughts and feelings connected with the events which had just transpired there faded in his mind, and other thoughts and feelings connected with the business of his present journey. The nearer he drew to Ayrshire the more did his mind dwell upon the object for which he was going thither, and the personal issues which might hang upon it.

Mr. Blackmore, author of "Lorna Dorne" and "The Maid of Sker," two of the most successful of English romances, is a market gardener.

A British firm is rolling iron bars of the enormous weight of five hundred and forty pounds per yard of the special quality used in the manufacture of Armstrong guns.

Father Thomas Burke says that when he sees an Irishman reeling drunk in the street, he feels as a priest he could die for him, but as an Irishman, he feels as if he could wring the fellow's neck.

CASH!

TREMENDOUS SUCCESS!

Ready Pay Principle Victorious!

THE NEW STORE

"CASH" is now doing Double the Amount of Trade for Ready Pay that any Credit Establishment in Guelph is doing.

WHY?

Because for Ready Pay a small profit only is asked, the money is turned over five times when Ready Pay is made, but the credit system entails an extra per centage added in marking goods, in order to guard against bad debts.

WHY?

Because he has to buy his stock on credit, and is thereby deprived of the large savings to be made by buying for cash, but the man who sells for ready pay has the money in hand when he goes to market, and can take every benefit that the trade will offer.
