rnational Exhibi 1857 it was the ingot, by which ely white header sived T AWARD opened a broat adustry. Krupp' ech block for ar ork so great tion of tile seam is gave an machinery which ed. The Krupp Il sorts of rail pecialty of the , while at Besse by the firm in the railway ma

s armor plate ity. Its pronerica, England under agreemen te scale of opera ns was immen works in West leburg, and coal mines r parts of the n Germany and mania Ship and upany, of Berli been brough tinctive of the who has just umber of philan initiated. He nies, with sup tals, casinos uildings, while asurance and co n of provision life are supplied German Govern-This vast or-ided by the real thy of the Late Former.

CARIBOU.

of caribou be erds of red or of the puzzling ory. The red size of the caripidly disappea the former u abounded in n Maine and in ec. Then the r, driven north lives, gradually of the caribou the north coun e neighborhood id St. Maurice rs past, though in the Ottawa, red deer and large numbers.

supposed, to nber of wolves cer is probably and east, and cen and killed v north of Que not been seen a generation old hunters ar his part of the grounds by pursuit of the that it is the r grounds territory to re fleeing for ng careful ob-lian woodsmen clousy of the t the approach with his mate ne and is en-f many inves-

in Stockton, ago. Grow-ere have been perjury, one three convic-ig. The case cost the State thousends of of Williams to be one of shots in the shed a record ull's-eyes ck, who us a terror to six shots she z a 22-calibre hist "called" or in another response. At tame, and he emently: "I tch you for The maiden othing! There o's teen try-ng for two t caught ma York."

"Do they miss me any? Do they talk of me? Do they wish me back again?" Katy asked, and Marian replied, "They talked of little else, that is your own family. Dr. Morris, I think, did not mention your name. He has grown very silent and reserved," and Marian's eyes were fixed inquiringly upon Katy, as if to ascertain how much she knew of the cause for Morris's reserve.

But Katy had no suspicion, and of the cause for Morris's reserve.

But Katy had no suspicion, and only repried, "Perhaps he is vexed that I do not write to him oftener, but I can't. I think of him a great deal, and respect him more than any living man, except, of course, Wilford; but when I try to write, something comes in between me and what I wish to say, for I want to convince him that I am rot as frivolous as he thinks I am. I have not forgotten the Sunday school, nor the church service; but in the city it is so hard to be good, and the service and music seem all for show, and I feel so hateful when I see Juno and Wilford's mother putting their heads wilford's mother putting their heads down on velvet cushions, knowing as I do that they both are thinking either of their own bonnets or those just in front."

just in front."

"Are you not a little uncharitable?" Marian asked, laughing in spite of herself at the picture Katy drew of fashion trying to imitate religion in its humility.

"Perhaps so," Katy answered. "I grow bad from looking behind the scenes, and the worst is that I do not care, and then Katy went back again to the farm-house, supplies guarantees.

dwelling, where the door opened as by magic, and Wilford himself confronted her, asking, with the tone which always made her heart beat, where she had been, and he waiting for her two whole hours. "Surely it was not necessary to stop so long with a seamstress," he continued when she tried to explain. "Ten minutes would suffice for directions," and he could not imagine what attraction there was in Miss Hazelton to keep her there three hours, and then the real cause of his vexation came out. He had come expressly for the carriage to take her and Sybil Grandon to a picnic up the river.

the carriage to take her and Sybil Grandon to a picnic up the river, whither his mother, Juno and Bell, had already gone. Mrs. Grandon must wonder why he staid so long and perhaps give up going. Could Katy be ready soon? and Wilford walked rapidly up and down the parlor with a restless motion of his hands which always betokened impatience. Poor Katy! how the brightness of the morning faded, and how averse she felt to joining the how averse she felt to joining the picnic, which she knew had been in prospect for some time, and had fan-cied she should enjoy! But not to-as thoughts of Genevra always made Wilford kinder to his wife, so now he kissed her white cheek, noticing that, as Mark had said, it was whiter than last year in June. But mountain air would bring back the roses, he thought, as he handed the roses are the rose.

But mountain air would bring back the roses, he thought, as he handed her the note.

"Oh, yes, from Marian Hazelton," Katy said, glancing first at the name and then hastily reading it through. "Who is Marian Hazelton?" Wilford asl'rd, and Katy replied by repeating all she knew of Marian, and how she chanced to know her at all. "Don't you remember Helen wrote that she fainted at our wedding, and I was so serry, fearing that I might have overworked her?"

Wilford did remember something

I was so serry, fearing that I might have overworked her?"
Wilford did remember something about it, and then dismissing Marian from his mind, he told Katy of his plan for taking her to the Mountain House a few weeks before going to Saratoga.
"Would you not like it?" he asked, as she continued silent, with her eyes fixed upon the window opposite.
"Yes," and Katy drew a long weary breath. I shall like any place where there are birds and rocks, and trees, and real grass, such as grows of itself in the country; but Wilford," and Katy crept close to him now, "if I might go to Silverton, I should get strong so fast! You don't know how I long to see home once more, I dream about it nights and think about it days, knowing just how pleasant it is there, with the roses in bloom and the meadows so fresh and green. May I go, Wilford?

Now pleasant it is there, with the roses in bloom and the meadows so fresh and green. May I go, Wilford? May I go home to mother?"
Had Katy asked for half his fortune just as she asked to go home, Wilford would have given it to her, but Silverten had a power to lock all the softer avenues of his heart, and so he answered that the Mountain House was preferable, that the rooms were engaged, and that as he should enjoy it so much better they would make no change.
Katy did not cry, nor utter a word of remonstrance; she was learn-word of remonstrance; she was learn-ing that quiet submission was better than uscless opposition ing that quiet submission was better than useless opposition, and so Sil-verton was again given up. But there was one consolution. Seeing Marian Hazelton would be almost as good as going home, for had she not recently come from that neighbor-hood, bringing with her the odor from the hills and fresheess. From hood, bringing with her the odor from the hills and freshness from the woods? Perhaps, too, she had lately seen Helen or Morris at church and had heard the music of the organ which Helen played, and the singing of the children just as it sometimes came to Katy in her dreams, making her start in her sleep and murmur snatches of the sacred songs which Dr. Morris had taught. Yes, Marian could tell her of all this, and very impatiently Katy waited for the morning when

Katy waited for the morning when she started for No.— Fourth Street, with the piles of sewing intended for It was a fault of Marian's not to main long contented in any place. Tiring of the country, she had teturned to the city, and thin mg she might succeed better a one, had bir-ed a room for d a room far up the narrow stairway of a high, sombre-tooking building, and then from her old acquaint-ances, of whom she had several in the city, she had solicited work. More than once she had passed the the city, she had solicited worth the city, she had passed the handsome house on Madison Square where Katy lived, walling slowly, and contrasting it with her one room which was not wholly uninviting, for where Marian went there was always an air of comfort; and Katy, as some crossed the threshold, uttered an exclaimation of delight at the cheerful, airy aspect of the apartment, with airy aspect of the apartment, with the bright ingrain carpet, its simple whint-covered while bright ingrain carpet, its simple whint-covered where the door opened and fushionable too?"

Then laying her bead upon the rock where she was sitting, katy tried to where she was sitting, katy tried to where she was sitting, katy tried to where she was sitting. sheet of the apartment, while the bright ingrain capet, its simple shades of white, its chint.—covered lounge, its one rocking-chair, its small parlor stove, and its pots of flowers upon the broad window sill.

"Oh Marian," she exclaimed, tripping agrees the floor, and impulsive-

"Oh Marian," she exclaimed, tripping across the floor, and impulsively throwing her arms around Miss. Hazelton's neck, "I am so glad to meet some one from home. It seems almost like Helen I am kissing," almost like Helen I am kissing, and her lips again met those of Mar-fan Hazelton, amid her joy at find-tag Katy unchanged, wondered what the Camerons would say to see their Mrs. Wilford kissing a poor seam-stress whom they would have spurn-ed,

But Katy did not care for Camerons then, or even think of them, as in her rich basquine and pretty hat, with emeralds and diamonds sparkling on her fingers, she sat down by Marian.

"Tell me of Silverton; you don't Tell me of Silverton; you don't know how I want to go there; but Wilford does not think it best, at present. Next fall I am surely going and I picture to myself just how it will look; Morris's garden, full of the autumnal flowers—the ripe peaches in our orchard, the grapes ripening on the wall, and the long shadows on the grass, just as I used to watch them, wondering what made peaches in our orchard, the grapes ripening on the wail, and the long shadows on the grass, just as I used to watch them, wondering what made them move so fast, and where they could be going. Will it be unchanged, Marian? Do places seem the same when once we have left them?" and Katy's eager eyes looked wistfully at Marian, who replied, "Not always—not often, in fact, but in your case they may. You have not been long away."

"Only a year," Katy said. "I was as long as that in Canandaigua; but this past year is different. I have seen so much, and lived so much, that I feel ten years older than I dial last spring, when you and Helen made my wedding dress. Dariing Helen! When did you see her last?"
"I was there five weeks ago," Mar-mstead to the graceru oachinge between Sybil and her husband, thinking how differently his voice had sounded when addressing her only a little while before.

"Pray put some animation into your face, or Mrs, Grandon will think we have been quarreling." Wilford whispered, as he lifted his wife from the carriage, and with a great effort katy tried to be gay and natural. But all the while she was fighting back her tears and wishing she were away. Even Marian's room, looking into the dingy court, was preferable to that place, and she was glad when the long day came to an end, and with a fearful headache she was riding back to the city.

The next morning was dark and rainy; but in spite of the weather Katy found her way to Marian's room, this time taking the — avenue cars, which left her independent as regarded the length of her stay. About Marian there was something more congenial than about her city friends, and day after day found her there, watching while Marian fashioned into shape the beautiful little garments, the sight of which had a strangely quieting influence upon Katy, sobering her down and maturing her more than all the years of her life had done. Those were happy hours spent with Marian Hazelton, and Katy felt it keenly when Wilford at last interferred, telling her she was growing quite too familiar with that sewing woman, and her calls must be discontinued, except, indeed, such as were necessary to the work in progress.

With one great gush of tears, when there was no one to see her, Katy such as were necessary to the work in progress.

With one great gush of tears, when there was no one to see her, Katy gave_Marian up, writing her a note, in which were sundry directions for the work, which would go on even after she had left for the Mountain House, as she intended doing the last of June. And Marian guessed at more than Katy meant she should, and with a bitter sigh laid it in her hasket, and then resumed the work, which seemed doubly monotonous now that there was no more listening for the little feet tripping up the stairs, or for the bird-like voice which had brought so much of music and sunshine to her lonely room.

CHAPTER XIX.

For three weeks Katy had been at the Mountain House, growing stronber every day, until she was much like the Katy of one year ago. But their stay among the Catskills was ended, and on the morrow they were going to Saratoga, where Mrs. Cameron and her daughters were, and where, too, was Sybil Granden the reigning belle of the United States. So Bell had written to her brother, bidding him to lasten on with Katy, as she wished to see "that chit of a widow in her proper place." And Katy had been weak enough for a moment to feel a little throb of satisfaction in knowing how effectually Sybil's claims to belle-ship would be put aside when she was once in the field; even glancing at herself in the mirror as she leaned on Wilford's shoulder, and feeling glad that mountain air and mountain exercise had brought the roses back to her eves. But Katy went passionback again to the farm-house, asking numberless questions and reaching finally the business which had brought her to Marian's room.

There were spots on Marian's neek, and her lips were white, as she grasped the bundles tossed into her lapthe yards and yards of lace and embroidery, linen, and cambric, which he was expected to make for the wife of Wilford Cameron; and her voice was husky as she asked directions or made suggestions of her own. wile of willord Cameron; and her voice was husky as she asked directions or made suggestions of her own.

"It's because she has no such joy in expectation. I should feel so, too, if I were thirty and unmarried," Katy thought, as she notice Marian's agitation, and tried to divert her mind by talking of Europe and the phaces she had visited.

"By the way, you were born in England? Were you ever at Alnwick?" Katy asked, and Marian replied, "Once, yes. I've seen the castle and the church. Did you go there—to St. Mary's, I mean?"

"Oh, yes, and I was never tired of that old churchyard. Wilford liked it, too, and we wandered by the hour among the sunken graves, and quaint headstones."

"Do you remember any of the her white cheeks and the brightness to her eyes. But Katy wept passion-ate tears of repentance for that weak-ness, when an hour later she read the letter whi h Dr. Grant had sent in letter whi h Dr. Grant had sent in answer to one she had written from the Mountain House, confessing her short-comings, and lamenting that the evils and excesses which shocked her once did not startle her now. To this letter Morris had replied as a brother might write to an only sister, first expressing pleasure at her happiness, and then reminding her of that other life to which this is only a preparation, and beseching her so among the suncen graves, and quant headstones."

"Do you remember any of the names upon the stones! Perhaps I may know them?" Marian asked; but Katy did not remember any, or if she did, it was not "Genevra Lampert, aged 22." And so Marian asked her no more questions concerning Alnwick, but talked instead of London and other places, until three hours went by, and down in the street the coachman chafed and fretted at the long delay, wondering what kept his mistress in that neighborhood so long. Had she friends, or had she come on some errand of mercy? The latter most likely, he concluded, and so his face was not quite so cross when Katy at last appeared, looking at her wath and exclaiming at the lateness of the hour. a preparation, and beseeching her so to use the good things of this world, given her in such profusion, as not to lose the life eternal.

This was the substance of Morris's This was the substance of Morris's letter, which Katy read with streaming eyes, forgetting Saratoga as Morris's solemn words of warning and admonition rang in her ears, and shuc'dering as she thought of losing the life eternal, of going where Morris would never come, nor any of those she loved the best, unless it were Wilford, who might reproach her with having dragged him, there where she was sitting, Katy tried to pray as she had not prayed in months asking that God would teach her what she ought to know and keep her unspotted from the world. But at the Mountain House it is easier to her unspotted from the world. But at the Mountain Hoase it is easier to pray that one be kept from temptation than it is at Saratoga, which this summer was prowded to overflowing, its streets presenting a fitting picture of Vanity Fair, so full were they of show and gala dress. At the United States, where Mrs. Cameron stopped, two rooms, for which an enormous price was paid, had been reserved for Mr. and Mrs. Wilford Cameron, and this of itself would have given them a certain eclat, even if there had not been present many who remembered the proud, fastidious bachelor, and were proportionately anxious to see his wife. She came, she saw, she conquoced; and within three days after her arrival Katy Cameron was the acknowledged belle of Saratoga, from the United States to the Clarendon. And Katy, alas, was not quite the same as she who on the mountain ridge had sat with Morris's letter in her hand, praying that its teachings might not be forrotten. Saratoga. ridge had sat with Morris's letter in her hand, praying that its teachings might not be forgotten. Saratoga seemed different from New York, and she plunged into its gaieties, never pausing, never tiring, and seldom giving herself time to think, much less to pray, as Morris had bidden her do. And Wilford, though hardly able to recognize the usually timid Katy in the brilliant woman who led rather than followed, was sure of her rather than followed, was sure of her faith to him, and so was only proud and gratified to see her bear off the palm from every competitor, while Juno, though she quarreled with the Juno, though she quarreles shadow into which she was so com-pletely thrown, enjoyed the eclat pletely thrown, enjoyed the eclat cast upon their party by the presence

Abbey's What Everybody says is good is worth Trying.

When every one says a good word for a thing it is because it is a good thing. Try "Abbey's" then say what you think about it .- A tea spoonful on retiring will cleanse the system of impurities-stimulate the liverquicken the circulation—quiet the nerves—tone up the stomach and digestive organsprevent indigestion and dyspepsia-put and keep the body in good health the tonic properties of "Abbey's" work or Mrs. Willow, who had passed beyond her criticism. Sybil Grandon, too, stood back in wonder that a simple country give snow we are the laurels she had so long claimed as her own; but as there was no help for it she contented herself as best she could with the admiration she did receive, and whenever opportunity occurred, said bitter things of Mrs. Wilford, whose parentage and low estate were through her pretty generally known. But it did not matter there what Katy had been; the people took her for what she was now, and Sybil's glory faded like the early dawn in the coming of the full day.

All Druggists sell bbeys

As it had been at Saratoga, so it was at Newport. Urged on by Mrs. Cameron and Bell, who enjoyed her notoriety, Katy plunged into the mad excitement of dancing and driving and coqueting, until Wilford himself became uneasy, locking her once in her room, where she was sleeping after dinner, and conveniently forgetting to release her until after the depurture at evening of some youngmen from Cambridge, whose attentions to the Ocean House belle had been more strongly marked than was altogether agreeable to him. Of course it was a mistake—the locking of the door—and a great oversight in him not to have remembered it sooner, he said to Katy, by way of apology; and Katy, with no suspicion of the truth, laughed merrily at the joke repeating it down stairs to the old dowagers, who shrugged their shoulders meaningly and whispered to each other that it might be well if more young wives were locked into their rooms and thus kept out of mischief.

Though flattered, caressed, and admired. Katy was not doing herself

Though flattered, caressed, and admired, Katy was not doing herself much credit at Newport; but save much credit at Newport; but save Wilford, there was no one to raise a warning voice, until Mark Ray came down for a few days' respite from the heated city, where he had spent the entire summer, taking charge of the business which belonged as much to Wilford as to himself. But Wilford had a wife; it was more necessary that he should leave, Mark had argued; his time would come by and by. And so he had remained at home until the last of August, when he appeared suddenly at the Ocean House one night when Katy, ip her airly robes and child-like simplicity, was breaking hearts by the score.

House one night when Katy, in her airy robes and child-like simplicity, was breaking hearts by the score. Like others, Mark was charmed, and not a little proud for Katy's sake, to see her thus appreciated; but when one day's experience had shown him more, and given him a look behind the scenes, he trembled for her, knowing how hard it would be for her to come out of that sea of dissipation as pure and spotless as she went in. "If I were her brother I would warn her that her present career is not one upon which she will look back with pleasure when the excitement is over," he said to himself; "but if Wilford is satisfied it is not for me to interfere. It is surely nothing to me what Katy Cameron does," he kept repeating to himself; but as often as he said it there came up before him a pale, anxious face, shaded with Helen Lennox's bands of hair, and Helen Lennox's voice whispered to him: "Save Katy, for my sake," and so next day, when Mark found himself alone with Katy, while most of the guests were at the beach, he questioned her of her life at Sarratoga and Newport, and gradually, as he talked, there crept into Katy's heart a suspicion that he was not pleased with her account, or with what he had seen of her since his arrival.

For a moment Katy was indignant arrival.

For a moment Katy was indignant but when he said to her kindly: "Would Helen be pleased?" her tears started at once, and she attempted an excuse for her weak folly, accusing Sybil Grandon as the first cause of the ambition for which she bated of the ambition for which she hated

"She had been held up as my pattern," she said, half bitterly, and forgetting to whom she was talking — "she, the one whom I was to imitate; and when I found that I could go beyond her, I yielded to the temptation, and exulted to see how far she was left behind. Besides that," she continued, "is it no gratification, think you, to let Wilford's proud mother and sister see the now proud mother and sister see the poor country girl, whom ordinarily they would despise, stand where they cannot come, and even dictate to them if she chooses so to do? I know it is wrong—I know it is wicked—but I like the excitement, and so long as I am with these people I shall never be any better. Mark Ray, you don't know what it is to be surrounded by a set who care for nothing but fashion and display, and how they may outdo each other. I hate New York society. There is nothing there but husks."

Katv's tears had ceased, and on Katy's tears had ceased, and on her white face there was a new look of womanhood, as if in that out-burst she had changed, and would never again be just what she was before.

"Say," she continued, "do you like New York society?" New York society?"

"Net always—not wholly," Mark answered; "and still you misjudge it greatly, for all are not like the people you describe. Your husband's family represent one extreme, while there are others equally high in the social scale who do not make fashion the rule of their lives—sensible, cultivated, intellectual people, of whose acquaintance one might be glad—people whom I fancy your sister Helen would enjoy. I have only met her twice, but my impression is that she would not find New York distasteful."

Mark did not know why he had met her twice, but my impression is that she would not find New York distasteful."

Mark did not know why he had dragged Helem into that conversation, unless it were that she seemed very near to him as he talked with Katy, who replied:

"Yes, Helen finds good in all. She sees differently from what I do, and I wish so much that she was here."

"Why not send for her?" Mark asked, easting about in his mind whether in case Helen came, he, too, could tarry for a week and leave that business in Southbridge, which he must attend to ere returning to the city.

It would be a study to watch Helen Lannox there at Newport, and in imagination Mark was already her sworn knight, shielding her from criticism, and commanding for her respect from those who respected him when Katy tore his castle down by answering impulsively:

"I doubt if Willord would let me send for her, nor does it matter, as I shall not remain much longer. I do not need her now, since you have shown me how foolish I have been. I was angry at first, but now I thank you for it, and so will Helen. I shall tell her when I am in Silverton. I am going there from here, and oh, I so wish it was to-day."

The Peet Turned.

The Poet Turned.
Office Boy—I told dat poet wot called dat you wuz out of town.

Editor—Good! What did he say?

Office Boy-He said he thought he noticed an improvement in de paper.

Salt pork is a famous oldfashioned remedy for consumption. "Eat plenty of pork," was the advice to the consumptive 50 and 100 years ago.

Salt pork is good if a man Style, Fit and Price can stomach it. The idea behind it is that fat is the food the consumptive needs

Scott's Emulsion is the modern method of feeding fat to the consumptive. Pork is too rough for sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion is the most refined of fats, especially prepared for easy digestion.

Feeding him fat in this way, which is often the only way, is half the battle, but Scott's Emulsion does more than that. There is something about the combination of cod liver oil and hypophosphites in Scott's Emulsion weak parts and has a special OF AFF EDD PURPLED ON THE SPECIAL NO AT THE action on the diseased lungs.

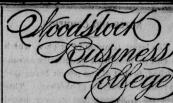

A sample will be sent free upon request. Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy. SCOTT &

BOWNE, CHEMISTS, Toronto, Ontario.

"Let sleeping dogs lie." Beware of the "bargain" shoe! Why is it sold at a "reduced price" if it is worth full price? Leave lottery shoes carefully alone, and look for the Makers' price, stamped on the sole of the sure value shoe-"The Slater Shoe"

"Goodyear Welled" Caristie & Caron, sele local agente.

The Needs of the Farmer's Son

Why feel embarrassed when you have to transact business in the bank or offices when a THREE MONTHS' COURSE in our college will put you in a position to know what to do and how to do it?

Write for particulars or call and talk it over.

R. W. NICKERSON, President. H. L. WEBBER, Principal.

Deering | Machinery

Full line of Farming, Implements, Also agent for Buggies, Cutters. Wagons, Sleighs, etc. Repairs of all kinds in stock.

W. R. HARE,

Talbot st. west.

L OR SALE—100 Barrel Roller Grist Mill three story brick in good running order, 33,000 buthel iron clad grain elevator nearly used for flowage for water power, which is sufficient to run the mill mere than healt the time, the balance of time is run by steam. The mill is doing a good paying be sines, is located just outside the corporation of the town of Aylmer, is offered cheep and on easy terms of payment, good reason for selling. Apply to C. O. Learn, Real Estate Broker, Brown House Block, Aylmar, Ont.

-OFFICE OF-

Treasurer of the Township of Notary Public, Conveyancer, Assignee, Etc.

ISSUER OF

MARRIAGE LICENSES

General Fire Insurance Agent. PRIVATE FUNDS TO LOAN.

We Are After Business

So don't lose your eyesight looking for anything better than you can get from us in fine tailoring. Our stock is large and strictly up to date. We have the very large factor have the very latest fashions, and can satisfy the most fasti-

Our cutter is an honor graduate of the John J. Mitchell School, of New York City, and we employ none but experienced hands. If you are not one of our regular customers, give us a trial order and be convinced.

S. T. LOGAN.

PT. BURWELL, ONT.

THIRTY-FIVE HOR

THE LABORST AND BEST EQUIPPED LIVES

that puts new life into the First-class Turn Out

Lowest Prices Scale - Opposite Town Hall.

LW. Plerce & Son

At This Season

You need a little Brandy and Wine. You can't keep Christmas without it. We offer a good sound wine at 25c a quart bottle and brandy from 75c.

SMITH'S LIQUOR STORE