A day or two later the party from the city arrived, and great was the excitement in the village, Sol Mantring's wife, who had learned of what was expected, made a trip to the highest conversation one protext or other, reaching there always just before the time of the arrival of the train from the city, received the deserved reward of her Industry, and before sunset of the day on which the party arrived everybody in the village knew that when Lucia stepped from the arriage at the farm-house door Mrs. Hayn angath her in her arms and almost hugged the life out of her. Everybody knew, also, has the party was to be there for only 2s looks.

the life out of her. Everyoody know, also, hat the party was to be there for only 25 hours.

The shortness of the time at their disposal was probably the reason that Phil and Lucia disappeared almost immediately after the meal which quickly followed their arrival. They went to the lify pond; there were not like yet upon the water, but the coule did not notice their absence; they could see the party of the property were ten months before. They got than into the old birch bark cance; it was tot as clean as it should have been for the ske of Lania's expensive traveling dress, for the small boys of the Hayn family had not taken as good care of it as Phil would be, but Phil made a cushion of leaves, which Lucia slowly expanded into a couch, as she hair realined while she Identified the scenes which her farmer boy guide and boatman and shown her the summer before. Phil thought her expression angelic as she freamily gazed about ther; yet when her eyes reverted to him, as they frequently did, he informed himself that there were oven craditions of angelic expression.

They even rode in the old beach waron; the cean was still as oold as winter; bathing the cean was still as oold as winter; bathing the cean was still as oold as winter; bathing the cean was still as oold as winter; bathing the first property of the p

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"Well, Lou Ann," said Farmer Hayn one morning when the month of May had reached that stage when farmers forget their coats excent on Sundays, "it'll seem 'most like takin' boarders again to have such a big crowd of city folks in the house, won't it?"

"Not quite as bad as that," said Mrs. Hayn, carefully moving an iron over one of the caps which she reserved for grand occasions. "Only Mr, and Mrs. Tramlay an' the two gals."

stone. "Only Mr. and Mrs. Tramay an the two gals."

"Well, you orth't to forget that Phil is eity folks now, an—I declare to gracious, I believe I forget to tell you that Miss Dinon—that splendid gal I told you about, that owns a lot of stock in the company—Phil's writ that like enough she'll come down too. She an'her mother want to pick a lot for a couse for themselves before it's too late for such of a choice."

ouse for themselves before it's too late for much of a choice."

"Well, I can't understand it yet," said Mrs. Hayn carefully picking the lace edging of the cap into the proper neglige effect.
"It seems like a dream. Here's me, that's sometimes been almost a-dyin't og et away from this farm an' into the city, an' there's a whole passel of city folks goin't to leave their palaces in New York an' come down nere to live on little pieces of our farm an' other farms along the ridge. I tell you, I can't understand it." over stocks in Wall street. I think the work far more honorable and manly, too. You're quite at liberty to repeat this to any of our mutual friends in the city; I'm sure 'twill amuse them, and their laughter won't annoy me a particle."
"They wouldn't laugh," said Miss Dinon, "if they could breathe this glorious air awhile, and foresee the gold which this ground will yield, unless appearances are deceifful."

other farms along the ridge. I tell you, I can't understand it."

"Wel," said the farmer, picking some bits of oat chaff from his shirt sieeve, "it ain't always easy to understand city folks at first sight. Now, there's that feller Marge. When I fust saw him in New York I wouldn't have eive him his salt for any work he'd do in the country. Yet now look at him! Them reads an drives through the company's property wouldn't have been half so near done if he hadn't come down here an'took hold to hurry things along for the spring trade. Why, some of them fellers that's doin' the work has worked for me on he farm, off an'on, for years, an'I thought I knowed how to get as much out of 'em as ther' was in 'em; but, bless your soul, he manages' em a good deal better."

"They do say he's a master hand at managin', Mrs. Hayn admitted, 'an' that it's partly because he takes right hold himself, instead of standin' round bossin' like most city men." "That's strange, ain'tit?' said Mrs. Hayn, with a quizzical look that made her husband stare.

"Oh !" said the old man, after a little reflection.

"You're growin' dretful old an' short-sighted, Reuben," said Mrs. Hayn; and the farmer made haste to change the subject of conversation.
