Dangerous Mark Twain. It has remained for the progressive and democratic West to shatter an many millions of Englishspeaking people have been worshiping Word comes from Denver, that "Huckleberry Finn," of Twain's books the one most often associated with his name, has been excluded from the public library of that city on the ground that it is "Immoral and sacrilegious." If the incident actually occurred it would seem to indicate that the United States is a nation of freaks. One would find | northward. it necessary to go back to the Blue Law days of Connecticut to find a parallel for it. The cheap paper novel is an evil which will probably always exist as long as boys are born with imaginations. To extirpate it in one stroke without offering the boys something in its place would be impossible, and it is the disregard of this fact that makes useless the work of so many social purity organizations. By giving the boy literature, that, while appealing to his imagination and his inherent love of adventure, is healthful and manly in its tone, you may in time cure him of his taste for the lurid and unnatural form, for at heart every boy is manly. With the exception of "Robinson Crusoe" and "Tom Brown at Rugby," no book ever published in the English or in any other language appeals more strongly to boyish enthusiasm than Mark Twain's delightful story of the Mississippl. There is not a single sentence in the whole book that could possibly suggest a wrong thought to a boy's mind. The little escapades of Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn are essentially boys' pranks, and as long as boys continue to be boys we shall find them playing pranks. The whole tone of the book is healthful and manly, and if Mark Twain had never written another line he still would have been worthy of the worship of every real boy in berry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer" were be little demand for the blood-andthunder variety that sell for a nickel. But at the present rate at which American farmers are going to Canada, the ele-vator builders will have hard work to keep up .- Minneapolis Tribune.

If any further assurance is needed that the present is "the growing time" in the great Canadian West, it is furnished by the newspapers of the United States. It has not been the Londoners are deeply interested and custom of United States journalists in they will share the pleasure of his the past to take Canada seriously; it friends in all parts of Canada in the has pleased them better to refer to it news that soon he will be again fit for as the Great Lone Land, a mere fringe of snow-covered plains on their northern borders, inhabitated by French fur traders and Indians. It would not be fair to their intelligence to say they did not know better, for, as a matter of fact, they have realized for a long time that Canada is a country of vast resources. Their indifference was, rather, affected. But recently an extraordinary change has come about. The entire press of the republic from Boston to the Golden Gate is devoting much attention to Canada, and, although there is an occasional sneer. the more influential journals frankly admit that the Dominion is on the crest of a wave of prosperity and development which must eventually make It a formidable rival of the United States in the markets of the world. The paper quoted above has another editorial under the significant heading, "Northward the Star of Empire," in which it points out that the westward trend of settlement is already beginning to diverge to the great, fertile plains of the Canadian West, It says:

"The westward trend of settlement on this continent must come to a halt on the Pacific coast, Beyond, there are slands of the sea, and Asia, but those lands are already filled with teeming populations. There is yet a considerthe large migration is already sheeroff towards the north. There are occupied in clutching their skirts.

vast uninhabitated tracts reaching to the arctic seas. Time was when most of this was regarded as too cold in climate for the occupation of civilized man, but opinion upon this subject has rapidly changed in the past few years. It has been discovered that there are fine wheat lands in far-off Athabasca, and the valley of the Saskatchewan is exploited as a veritable garden. * * * Already there is talk of another transcontinental line north of the Canadian Pacific. The projected route is from Port Simpson on the Pacific through the Pine or the Peace River district in Athabasca, London, Thursday, August 21. thence southward across the northeastern corner of Saskatchewan, passing north of Lake Winnipeg, through the district of Keewatin and Northern Ontario to Moose Factory, on James Bay, through Northern Quebec to Chicoutimi, with extensions to Montreal and Quebec, and branches to Winnipeg and Toronto. It is not to be supposed that this road will be built without from the Canadian Government. ald but the enterprise and courage that put through the Canadian Pacific in the days of little general faith in it, may suffice for this. To the Americans and other settlers who are rushing into the far Canadian Northwest, additional railroad facilities will be a necessity to enable them to market their surplus crops at a profit. The American immigration is no doubt what has led to the conception of the plan outlined Thus American enterprise is above. helping to push the star of empire northward. We may regret that it cannot find sufficient expansion and tempting field of operation under the stars and stripes; but we may console ourselves with the thought Greater Canada that is to be built up in the Northwest Territory will one day be drawn all the more strongly to its southern neighbor by this influx of

Mid-Ocean Telegraphy.

A scheme is on foot in Liverpool, according to the Electrical World and Engineer, which, it is claimed, will soon be in commercial operation for utilizing wireless telegraphy in a midocean postoffice and signal station. It is the intention to permanently moor at point 110 miles west of The Lizard a ship which will be equipped with a searchlight and a complete set of Marconi apparatus. As the water at the point selected will involve the use of a mooring chain 400 or 500 feet in length, the weight of which would prevent the bows from riding buoyantly over the heavy seas, the vessel will be provided with a horse-pipe placed on the keel of the foremast. The searchlight is to have a vertical beam for the purpose of illuminating the clouds, and enab ling the floating postoffice to be picked up at night from a distance of 60 miles or more. As the vessel will be located in the fair way of the British Channel, it will be advantageously placed for the distribution of orders sent from shore by the owners to vessels which are passing in or out of the channel. Thus a ship coming in from the west or from the south could be directed, as soon as it picked up the station, to or an English Channel port. By this would neans pilotage and port dues be reduced, and, of course, there would be a considerable saving of time. The vessel will serve as a floating station, the world. A cablegram from Paris to the Atlanta Constitution says that ten women took out licenses for wearing trousers during the ensuing twelve months, among them decorators, painters, one cab-driver, and one foreman in a printing office. The Widow Malone.

[Charles Lever.] Charles James Lever was born at Dublin in 1806. He was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and afterwards became a physician as well as a journalist, and the editor of the Dublin University Magazine. He was consul at Spezzia in 1858, and later at Trieste, where he died in 1872. His poems, when he did not try to be serious, are full of humor, and rhythm. Se wrote, among other novels, "Harry Lorrequer," "Charles O'Malley" and "Tom Burke of Ours.'

Capt. Shoemaker, chief of the revenue cutter Service, heard through the Aleutian Island natives that there was a seal herd near the western end of the long chain of islands, and he issued instructions last spring that the re-port be investigated by the Manning. It is believed that further discoveries will be made which, in view of the gradually declining seal fisheries in the Pribyloff Islands, will prove to be of great importance.
