The Irish Secretary, Sir Hamar House of Commons a grant of £750, 000, as compensation for damages to administration here. property in Northern Ireland during the disorders of the past three years. During the excited debate which followed, he explained that by agreement between Colonial Sécretary Churchill, and Sir James Craig, Prime Minister of the Ulster Government, the British Government promised to pay Ulster £1,500,000 for damages committed up to the 1st of January. This does not cover the amount the national treasury will grant to Ireland by any means.

Sir Hamar Greenwood told the House there would be also an appropriation of another £1,500,000 for relief work for Catholics and Protestants in Northern Ireland, as a further estimate of £2,000,000 to compensate crown employees, most of whom have lost their positions through the establishment of the new governments. The total awards made by the courts in Northern Ireland to persons who have suffered damages amount to £2,000,000, so that with the British government defraying £1,500,000, there will be £500,000 for the Ulster government
