invalid, and it was an strand to procure him some necessaries that took me out to-night."

Ned accepted the invitation, and that was the beginning of his acquaistance with M. Bertrand and his charming daughter Maria.

Ned Armour was the junior of a law firm of which his uncle, Mr. Banting, was the head. He had little love for the profession, but had entered it to please his uncle, to whom he owed everything, lis rearing included. It is asfe to say that after the advanture, just related he spent two evenings in the succept, of Marie and ber father to one passed with Coke & Blackstone.

M. Bertrand was an old soldier of the first empire, who, with the fail of his chief, had lost all; and driven into carle with his infant child, he had wandered from country to co

"Tell these gentlemen who you are," said Ned, "though one of them doesn't seem to reed the information."

"I am Antoine Bertrand," replied the old man, proudly, "the brother and heir of him on whose fortune this base wretch seeks to lay his lawless grasp. It was this villain, when the star of my illustrious chief went down at Waterloo, who, through perjury and falsehood, drove me into exile, and received, as the reward of his perfidy, my entire wealth. The proofs he now presents are as false as those he manufactured then, but I have documents here which will leave no doubt as to my right."

The false heir did not remain to see in The false heir did not remain to see inspected the packet of papers which the old man presented. Suffice it to say, they were found in all respects correct. Marie Bertrand was new a match for the wealthiest man in the land, and when Ned told his uncle that it was she whom he had picked out for a wife, the old gentleman didn't object; neither did Marie nor her father; and Ned Armour lived for many years, happiest of husbands.

It was a capital hit and well delivered, full between the eyes. It sent the recipient, a gaudily dressed fop, spinning into the gutter, much to the detriment of a probability of a visit from cholers, for when insulting an unproteoned girl, whose hurried steps and timid manner betrayed her uneasiness at being alone on the street at such an hour.

Catsurh, on account of its prevalence in this country, is attracting a good deal of attention, more especially now when there is a probability of a visit from cholers, for when insulting an unproteoned girl, whose hurried steps and timid manner betrayed her uneasiness at being alone on the street at such an hour.

Having done his duty in the premises, and waiting to see the bespattered coxcemb pick himself up ungracefully and alink away abashed and cowed. Ned Armoor turned to see what had become of his protege.

She stood trembling as though fright had arrested her steps. Her pale face, on which the light of a neighboring lamp chanced to fail, was of surpassing beauty; and Ned, being a knight as gailant as brave, begged permission to see her safe home.

In a sweet, gentle votee, with a slightly foreign tinge, she accepted the offer, and the two walked on together, for the most part, silently.

"Will you not come in, sir?" said the girlt, stopping at the door of a plain looking house. "My father, I am sure, will wish to thank you for the kind service you have rendered. "The deceased spoke of having a brother," said the trustee, "in search of whom he was traveling."

"Yes, his brother Antoine," said the country years ago, and of whose death I have ample proofs,"

The papers were submitted to Mr. Banting, who promised to examine them and give his ophnion next day, at which time, if everything was regular, the money was to be furned over to the claims ant.

"The great demand for a pleasant, safe and reliable antidote for all affections of the throat and lungs is fully met with in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Sysup. It is a purely vegetable compound, and acts promptly and magically in subduing all coughs, colds, broughtits, inflammation of the lungs, etc. It is so palatable that a child will not refuse it, and is put at a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

There is no knowing to what a pitch the discussion would have reached but for the entrance of two gentlemen, who came to consult Mr. Banting.

A Frenchman, a stranger, it seems had died suddealy while on a visit to the city some years before, leaving a large sum of money. One of the two gentlemen present had been appointed trustee of the fund, and the other daimed to be next of kin to the deceased, whose cousin he asserted himself to be.
