Prof. W. C. Palmer, agricultural editor of the extension department of the State Agricultural College of North Dakota, says this in a foreword to "the ten commandments of dry farming," submitted to John T. Burns, secretary of the Dry Farming Congress, for adoption at the fifth annual convention, in Spokane, Oct, 8 to 6, in connection with the third international exposition of dry farming products. The commandments follow: I. Thou shalt plow deep. Deep plowing permits rain to permeate the soil easily and without remonf, also provides more feeding space for plant roots and makes available more plant food.

II. Thou shalt keep the surface soil

This prevents soil moisture from eva-poration and conserves the rainfall. Harrow grain after it is up two inches or use weeder.

III. Thou shalt cultivate level.

Level soil affords the least exposure to the air and will take in rainfall faster than ridged soil.

IV. Thou shalt summer fallow.

This should be practised in all districts where the annual precipitation is less than 15 inches, as it conserves two years' rain for one crop and kills weeds and plant diseases; land should be cultivated. Where the yearly rain-Hamilton correspondence that, in a fall is more than 15 inches corn is as good a preparation for a crop as the bare fallow.

V. Thou shalt add organic matter to This holds moisture and plant food, improves mechanical conditions of the soil and lessens washing, drifting and blowing. Stable manure is the best form. Plow weeds under while green.

VI. Thou shalt keep down the weeds.

Weeds consume moisture and plant Weeds consume moisture and plan food, crowd plants, shade crops, retard plant life and make land work harder. VII. Thou shalt grow early maturing crops.

Conditions for growing are best during the early summer; winter grains are better than those sown in the VIII. Thou shalt grow corn every three to five years.

The cultivation required for corn saves moisture, kills weeds and plant diseases. Corn is the best preparation for a grain crop; it produces more food and fodder per acre than other crops. Do not hill up the corn, as this wastes the moisture. IX. Thou shalt grow clover or alfalfa every few years. Rotating with these grasses adds fertility and organic matter to the soil: kills weeds and diseases of plants and produces excellent hand and valuable produces excellent hand and valuable seed crops.

X. Thou shalt keep stock.

The most profitable way of marketing grain and fodder is thru stock, which produces the manure necessary to the soil and brings prosperity and plenty to the dry land farmer.

"Prof. Palmer's presentation of the principles of this modern method of tillage, in the shape of precepts, appeals strongly to members of the local board of control," said Secretary Burns, "and it is likely that a substantial prize will be offered for the best ten commandments on dry farming. The commandments on dry farming. The plan is to submit all to the executive committee of the Dry Farming Congress to cull the best thoughts and prepare a set of commandments, to be in-corporated in a handbook as a guide for dry land farmers all over the world." Y. M. C. A. Convention.
