GREAT PICTURES AT MASSEY HALL

A Better Story of Heroism Has Never Been Shown Than the Tale of Capt. Scott.

Never have moving pictures told a tale of greater heroism than those being shown in Massey Hall. Never have moving pictures presented more interesting activities of animal, fish, and bird life amid the frozen wastes of the Antarctic circle. The illustrated tale of the Capt. Scott expedition to the south pole reveals much that could not be imagined by reading the account in a book, written by a masterly narrator, or by listening to an account by a masterly lecturer. One may read of the finding of the bodies of the heroes, and have but a vague impression of the tented tomb. But, in the moving pictures the interior of the tent is shown, and in it the men who afterwards found it their last resting place. The depicting of the men partaking of the evening meal, and the cutting down in their sleeping bags, led fancy on to the feelings of the rescuers when the heroes were found dead in their sleeping bags in the tent.

Transportation. Other pictures of the methods of transportation by ponies and sleds revealed the drain upon the vitality of the men who found the south pole, yet died on the return journey thru the territory known to explorers as the barrier. That the heroes could be within a few miles of the necessities for maintenance of life, and yet be compelled by a long-lasting and unfaceable storm to remain in their tent until death ended their journey, becomes understandable when the story of the expedition, is told in the moving pictures.

While all of the pictures are of absorbing interest, some leave a more lasting impression. One of a football match on the snow-covered ice, in- navy blue tulle, and well dressed, provides a whole chapter of thoughts upon the manner of life and the manner of men in the expedition.

Another picture of a team leaving on a journey, rushing the start, and speeding over the ice, as the driver before a hurricane, tells of the way in which a dash for the pole is arranged. And another picture of four men, harnessed to sled, tramping steadily for hundreds of miles, an accompaniment to a lecture that is a masterpiece of dramatic art, provides a whole chapter of thoughts upon the manner of life and the manner of men in the expedition.

Other biographical scenes of real life, and of communities, and of dorsal-finned whales as wolves of the ocean, disclose some of the wonders of the Antarctic. All the pictures are well prepared, and well delivered. The profits of the entertainment go to the fund for the care of those who are dependent upon the heroes who are now lying at the barrier.
