A GLANCE AT SITUATION IN IRELAND Belfast Business Man Talks of The Agitation Against Home Rule FIGHT TALK NONSENSE Hope to Have Good Share in Representation in the New Parliament—Attitude of The Presbyterian Farmers is Set Forth (Times' Special Correspondence) Dublin, June 21.—"Will Ulster fight?" is a question which is being asked by many sincere friends of Ireland and the answer to it depends on the politics of its giver. There are a lot of eminent politicians in the North of Ireland who are declaring loudly that "Ulster," by which they mean Belfast, Derry and other county lying between them, will fight in the event of the passage of the home rule bill by parliament, and they back their assertion by terrible tales of drilling and arming by "loyalists" in the Orange lodges. Only a few weeks ago Lord Mayor McCormick of Belfast, declared, in the House of Commons, that he knew that 60,000 young men in Belfast owned revolvers and that there were 100,000 of these deadly weapons in the hands of Unionists in the North of Ireland, while there were between 200,000 and 300,000 in the hands of Nationalists in the same area. Belfast drill meetings at Orange lodges for if not to use them" asked the Belfast Lord Mayor, and he pursued his policy making British flag creep by vague hints of thousands of rifles which he declared had been smuggled into Ireland in cargoes of coal. If McCormick's figures are correct, the "loyalists" are likely to be outnumbered hopelessly when it comes to fighters but perhaps they are relying on superior organization. Terrible tales are told about the arming of the Irish radicals, where the faithful are taught military tactics by officers of the British army. In fact, parliament was regarded the other day by an account of the proceedings in an Orange Lodge in Portadown, when 100 stout patriots were exercised with wooden clubs by a nameless colonel. The officer turned out to be voiceless as well as nameless, when Augustus Wells, a chief secretary for Ireland, produced the police report of this incident it contained the information that the officer's orders were inaudible. Incidentally it states that the purpose of the drill was to enable the men to march in decent order at a coming parade. Of course the fact is that "Ulster" has no intention of fighting and is running a gigantic bluff in the hope of impressing timid Englishmen and winning a few votes against the bill. The situation was summed up accurately a few days ago by a prominent Belfast business man, who is one of the loudest advocates of the fighting issue. He stipulated that his identity should not be disclosed and with this proviso was perfectly willing to tell the truth about the situation. "Are the Belfast people really so afraid of home rule that they will resist it by force?" he was asked. "Nonsense," he replied. "We leaders have to talk as we do to satisfy the extremists among our followers and, of course, we don't want home rule, because we think things are well enough as they are. We are going to fight it to the last minute, but we are not a bit afraid of it, and as soon as the bill becomes a law, as it is bound to do, we are going to jump in and get as many men as we can to that new parliament in Dublin. "I shouldn't be surprised if we would control it before long. We have the brains, the money and the men and we will have the support of the conservative element all over Ireland who are now forced into alliance with the Irish radicals and revolutionaries, because they consider home rule the all-important question. Ulster is going to cut a big figure in the Irish parliament, and we are not going to be such fools as to spoil it all by fighting. This is the considered opinion of a man who should know what he is talking about, and that it is shared by others is shown by the way in which they are making preparations for extending their business. Not for years has there been such a boom in factory building in Belfast as is going on now. Workman & Clark, a great ship-building firm the head of which, George S. Clark, is an Orange leader, have just acquired additional land from the corporation, and will nearly double the capacity of their yards. Another significant straw is the attitude of the great Hamilton family of which the Duke of Abercorn is the head. The duke is the greatest nobleman in Ireland and his family, since the days of King James II, has been noted for its success in picking the winning side. The present duke led Ulster in the agitation against the Gladstone home rule bills. He it was who coined the phrase, "Ulster will fight, and Ulster will be right." Today he has not been heard on the subject, and his brothers, who are eminent Unionist politicians, and his sons have been equally silent. They have left the leadership of the forlorn hope to Lord Londonderry, a descendant of the infamous Castlereagh of the union period, who is more noted for enthusiasm than ability. There is not a doubt that the Hamiltons look forward to holding the place they have always occupied as leaders in Irish politics. Another factor is the attitude of the Presbyterian farmers. The extreme Orangemen have always been drawn from the Presbyterians, but the backbone of Unionism has been the sturdy stock farmer, known as the "Scottish Irish," but really as purely Irish in most cases as their Catholic neighbors. These men can no longer be worked into a frenzy of excitement over a home rule question. It would be wrong to say that they have become home rulers, though many of the younger generation have done so, but they have outgrown their suspicion of their Catholic fellow-countrymen. The extension of local government is responsible for this, as it is brought about for the first time the uniting public bodies of men of different faiths. No movement in the "Ulster" counties could succeed without these men, who are now prepared to accept home rule and take their part in working it. The answer to the question is "Ulster won't fight, and Ulster will be right."
