REV. C. A. EATON

Says Farewell to His Congregation in Toronto.

A "Respectable Minority" Said to be Not Sorry He Is Going Away.

med with tears throughout the large congregation that sat or stood in Bloor street Baptist church last evening to hear the farewell sermon of their retiring pastor, Rev. Charles A. Eaton. The members of the congregation bould not have more fittingly expressed their love and goodwill toward their departing minister than by turning out in such a great throng that even the commodious schoolroom, where Mr. Eaton addressed the overflow, was packed to the doors.

The pastor's heart was too full for a long discourse. He spoke briefly of the Apostle Paul and his preaching in the City of Corinth. The one predominant note in all Paul's teaching was—Christ crucified. This he in his poor way had tried to imitate during the five years that he had been with them.

A WORD OF EXHORTATION. med with tears throughout the large

A WORD OF EXHORTATION.

He wanted to leave a few words of exhortation with his congregation before his departure. He entreated them to keep, their, religion pure and boly. Let them try and furnish the community with a higher type of civic conscience. "We are all too fond," said Mr. Eaton. "of throwing missiles at our public men. Yet these are our representatives, If they are thieves we are thieves, and if they are rogues we are rogues." He begged his people to think of their Christianity in all their dealings.

HARD FOR HIM TO LEAVE.

HARD FOR HIM TO LEAVE.
Before concluding, Mr. Eaton wished to thank his congregation for the love, sympathy and friendship that they had shown him, especially now on the eve of his departure. For his part, he could say truthfully that he had constantly striven with all his might for the good of the church. His flock he had always regarded as his own family, and it was hard for him to leave them now. But his work in Toronto was simply beyond his strength, he had to change or break down. So he believed he was right in accepting a call that would make his burden lighter for a little while. Perhaps he was going away to return no more. If so, he would always remember what they had been to him; he hoped they would not soon torget himself.

McMaster students, nearly all of whom attend the church, should have a better pulpit model, and that there was a too much levity in Mr. Eaton's methods to suit the devout people. They did not want a preacher who was popularly referred to as "Charlis" are old members of sub-check church, and it is said was the exception of the church and it is said ware vexed because they have been unable to get their pews, if they was too much levity in Mr. Eaton's as control to the evening service, and consequently many did not strend their church at alight.

It appears that, notwithstanding the manner in which Mr. Eaton has crowded the edifice, there is not as large a memberahly, and the sink possible of the complete of the

Those who think thus base their assumption on the fact that he had his telephone taken out some time ago and refused to renew the lease of his house. Mr. Eaton said at a recent meeting that if he had known there was such a wave of effection for him at Bloor street he would never have allowed the Cleveland call to be extended to him, but, while appreciating this remark, the "respectable minority" make the comparison that, whereast he sailary at Bloor street is $2,400, at the Cleveland church it is $5,000, as well as a fine mansion, an assistant pastor and other perquisites.

SEEMS RATHER INCONSISTENT.

Rev. Mr. Eaton is a Christian Socialist, and has made rancorous denunciations of the Standard Oil company and such gentlemen as Mr. Rockfeller, but, nevertheless, the church of which he is to assume charge in Cleveland has as its principal supporter Mr. Rockfeller. This is commented upon by the "respectable minority."

So far, nothing much has been done at Bloor street church as to the choice of Mr. Eaton's successor, but the opinion of the "respectable minority." Is that he will not be an American, while they think that Rev. Mr. Eaton will be happier and more useful in the United States.

There is no doubt, however, that, outside of the "respectable minority."

Mr. Eaton has been one of the most popular preachers who ever delivered a sermon in Toronto. SEEMS RATHER INCONSISTENT.

A peculiarly pathetic bond of union existed between a small company of men gathered in one of the rooms of St. George's hall, Westminster Bridge road. They were husbands with drunken wives, and they had met for the purpose of forming a society to secule legal protection for themselves and others in like case. Ineffectual Petruchios with a difference! Ah! no, that would be a cheap gibe in face of the pittful statements made to ears which could detect no degree of difference in their treadful import. It was not a woman with a froward temper each had to master, but a woman with a passion for strong drink.

They were mostly superior workingmen—one might have been Stephen Blackpool, stepped straight out of the pages of "Hard Times"—but others were evidently in a better position. They all had the same tale to tell. "It was to be May day all our lives," said the chairman," when we took our girl wives to church, but this curse of drink has broken our hearts and ruined our homes." Although the company was small, the organizer of the meeting, a cabman with twenty-five years experience of a drunken wife to look back upon, gave the assurance that he might have got many thousands to attend. But some could not come because their wives had pawned their only decent, suit of clothes for drink. Others did not care to make their affliction known in any gathering of their fellow-men; a number could not afford to take a long Journey to Westminster.

For grim tragedy there was nothing to charse between any of the tales un-

Westminster.
For grim tragedy there was nothing to choose between any of the tales unfalded. Some had left their wives in bed, recovering from Saturday's bout; all dreaded the effects of the mother's example on the children, especially the girls. One workingman had bought back his household effects six times in twenty-five years, his wife having sold them article by article for drink.

"Here," exclaimed another with dramatic effect, "is what I found before I left home this morning," and he produced a bundle of twenty-five pawn tickets—mute witnesses of a wrecked home.

sentiment in it, in spite of its fierceness.

"I love my wife," said one: "my wife is a perfect angel when she is sober," exclaimed another, with the emphasis of strong conviction.

"We married these women, and we cannot utterly cast them off, said a gentlemanly young fellow, "but we must have more protection than the law at present gives us." If there was any dissent so this "casting off" sentiment it came from a man of thirty years' experience, who admitted he was weary of it. His wife was a drunkard, and he said, with something like a wall in his voice, "My daughter, a young thing of twenty-five, only lately married, has been led away by her mother's example, and is now lost—lost."

One speaker suggested the formation.

EIAM STREET SCHOOLS.

The pupils of St. Peter's boys school assembled in the hall of the girls' school on Elm street at eleven o'clock, where addresses suitable to the occasion were given by Rev. M. J. Corduke, Rev. J. J. Pictures of different noted generals and statesmen were hing on the walls, and flags floated everywhere.

In the Elm street school the same style of exercises were carried out, nothing of special importance taking place. Lessons dealing with facts concerning the empire were heard, compositions read and songs and choruses given by the pupils.

The exercises were practically the same as in other schools. No special programme was prepared, but in the classrooms recitations, songs, choruses and drills were given and compositions read on patriotic subjects.

WINTER STREET SCHOOL. WINTER STREET SCHOOL.

One of the most pleasing features in Winter street, school was the drill by a number of girls in Miss Iddel's department, who wore very pretty dresses of white and blue. The rooms were all decorated with flags, flowers, and drawings, and in some of the rooms were grouped pictures of generals and statesmen, our empire makers. Programmes were rendered in all the rooms, and consisted of essays, songs, choruses, recitations and drills. This school also regrets the absence of a proper assembly hall, as the one formerly used for that purpose has been divided into class rooms.

In the Convent of the Sacred Heart, on Cliff street, exercises were held in the class rooms, as no hall large enough to accommodate the whole number of pupils was available. The rooms were all decorated, and essays and songs and drills, given by the pupils.
