he was an unsuccessful candidate in opposition to the cabinet of which Mr. nerson had become a m One would have supposed that this, first and most exciting experience in Mr. McKeown's political life would not so soon have faded from an otherwise adequate memory. Let it be recalled that Mr. MoKeown entered politics as a candidate against the Blair government. He was one of the revolters, and figured as the boy candidate. Elected in 1890, he was act-

candidate. Elected in 1890, he was act-ively engaged in the federal campaign of 1891 as a supporter of Sir John A. Macdonald's government. Not only did he appear on St. John platforms as a speaker in that memorable campaign; but he went out into the country con-stituencies, especially into Charlotte, where he did excellent but unsuccess-ful service in attempting to bring to an end the parliamentary career of the late Mr. Gillmor. It may also be re-membered that Mr. McKeown was in that federal election a competitor with that federal election a competitor with Mr. J. D. Hazen for the conservative nomination in St. John. Possibly the liberal party owes Mr. McKeown's presence in the ranks to the fact that Mr. Hazen got more votes than he in that for convention. For if Mr. Mc
