The note said: "Nobody is to blame; life has become too heavy a burden for me. Please procure a few stamps and send the letters off which you will find with me."

He had been reporting the Beecher trial for the Brooklyn Freie Presse. He was discharged on Saturday, and said to his fir inds that he believed that a man who was out of work was right in committing suicide. He was a cultivated man and a hard student. The coroner started to find the corpse but could only learn that his correspondent had left his boarding house, and that beyond that pothing was known. So now the question is was the reporter in earnest or only trying to fool a coroner.
