Prosecution addresses Court.

It has been shown that this particular crime is a dangerous one, the accused had driven head on and across the curb. It was raining and the road was slippery.

Knowing these things the accused approached curb at 25 m. p. h. an almost inevitable.

It being Sunday afternoon traffic was bound to be heavier particularly cycle traffic.

At an intersection it is quite possible for a cyclist to be crossing from one lane to another.

If the speed had been less things would not have happened so fast and there would not have been a solid.

With ref. to evidence - evidence can be taken in many ways than one.
