ice-bound in the harbour of Baltimore for a fortnight, until gradually released during the last few days. After an hour of patient (or impatient) watching for the arrival of a Customs officer, who, like the god of Ahab, "either is talking, or pursuing, or on a journey, or, peradventure, sleepeth, and must be awaked," but who, unlike the myth god, does eventually appear, and "put us through," we land in the monumental city, and are carried to Barnum's hotel.
