at them. And more than that shall...

"It seems that you are the only thing I do care for now," was the low answer.

"Then marry me, dear, and let me protect you as I have wanted for many a long day. Will you?"

"How their tongues wag!" he thought for her. "But I'll bring her now if I have to carry her. They're afraid of me. Things will be different then."

SERPENTS' TONGUES

After the humiliating interview with the School Board, which resulted in her resignation, Ellis Rhinehart closed and locked the heavy doors, gave the key to Mr. Weedler, her director, and walked dejectedly down the quiet village street.

"What of your mother, Stephen? She has never been friendly towards me and now you know how they will talk to her—after your bringing me home—and what Hardie saw."

"I don't know, Stephen," Ellis carried upon her a little more than usual. "It is so new. Let me think."

"I doubt if the neighbors meddle anyway, she wouldn't oppose me seriously—she thinks too much of me. Say yes, dear."

THE DIVINE MAGNET

A TRUE STORY BY REV. RICHARD W. ALEXANDER

Years ago, in the environs of Salt Lake City, a young girl of fourteen, the daughter of Brigham Young, strolled one day near the now famous Beehive.

She had seen her father from afar, and noted a stranger with him. She was a bright, graceful girl and one of her father's favorite daughters, and when he smiled and beckoned, she sprang to meet him.

"This is my daughter Martha," said the priest bent over her, "and daughter, this is a Catholic priest, Father Walsh."

THE OBJECT OF LIFE

A youth once came to St. Philip Neri, flushed with joy and buoyant with hope, as he was about to enter his career in life, having just finished his collegiate course.

"I don't want you to bring her here, that's all. Mrs. Weedler said herself it wouldn't do, the way folks are feeling. She said the School Board had to be won, and she was so trifling. Besides that she abused Mrs. Weedler's children. You just don't know her, Stephen. Mrs. Weedler says she wouldn't wait for Hardie last night, but started off foot so you'd overtake her and carry her home. She says it's country talk; the way that girl has run after you."

"I believe," put in Mrs. Gifford distractedly, "I had better go and hunt some more thread. I see we're pretty high out."

"The pastor was inspired to speak to her. He addressed her courteously and asked her if he could serve her in any way. In a half-frightened manner she told her two little children could be baptized. He invited her to the rectory, and there skillfully drew from her all the story. Knowing that the Mormons did not believe in the baptism of children, he told her gently that she was a Catholic, and that she must be assured the children would be baptized in the name of the Holy Trinity. With whom could she place them? They came the cry of her heart—

THE INFALLIBLE GUIDE

Fortunately many Protestants are beginning to acknowledge in their own hearts the necessity of an infallible guide in religion; and Rome's claim provokes them to inquire into her doctrines, which, they know, cannot be what Protestants declare them to be, if her claim is not true.

"Oh, Sir! Couldn't I be a Catholic?" Here was the moment of grace! And God's minister seized it. "Most certainly, my child, and I will instruct you myself!"

"I don't know what you are doing, but you are done with it, you poor thing," she told herself with savage joy. "It may be somebody's kitchen, or even tramping the countryside, but never, never again in the school room."

"I don't know what you are doing, but you are done with it, you poor thing," she told herself with savage joy. "It may be somebody's kitchen, or even tramping the countryside, but never, never again in the school room."

FRUIT OF CONFESSION

In a city in this diocese where is to be found one of the most complete railway systems, the superintendent, who is not a Catholic, but who has Catholic employees, has been making observations and has been putting two and two together, to the advantage of the Catholic men employed as conductors.

THE CHEERFUL CHANGES

The cheerful Christian is not much disturbed by the changes and accidents of daily life. He rides upon the storm. He rises superior to adversity. He is borne on the wings of hope and love. But the man of a gloomy and fretful temperament is oppressed by the burden of life, and sinks under it.

"I don't know what you are doing, but you are done with it, you poor thing," she told herself with savage joy. "It may be somebody's kitchen, or even tramping the countryside, but never, never again in the school room."
