CHIGNECTO POST AND BORDERER.

SACKVILLE, N. B., DEC. 14, 1882.

Current Science Notes.

Mr. W. D. Le Sueur opens the bell in December Popular Science

Monthly with a reply to Goldwin

Smith's criticism of Herbert Spencer's Data of Ethics. To make any adequate comment on this article would require more space than we can justly devote to the subject, important though it is. One remark, however, may be allowed us. "What the evolutionary theory does not do," says Mr. Le Sueur, "is to reconcile us to the miseries that have abounded in the history of the world, as possibly having their explanation and justification in some supernatural scheme of government. If the sufferings borne by our fellow-creatures are any part of the Divine scheme, we may well be contented as we feel that we are right in trying to alleviate them?"

Now Christian men and women, so far from being reconciled to the miseries abounding in the world, have always been strenuously engaged in grappling with them. And when we reflect that in this conflict between right and wrong there have been evolved the very brightest ethical types conceivable by the human intellect, we may well see in what sense "the sufferings borne by our fellow-creatures" are "a part of the Divine scheme." In Criminal ity in animals we have also an article of an ethical nature, and a very important one. It is, in fact, a misconception as to the meaning of the term crime. Science in relation to the Arts is the concluding portion of Dr. Siemens's address before the British Association, and The Relations of the Natural Sciences is an address delivered by Dr. Sturtevant before the Royal Society of Canada at Ottawa. In this address

Dr. Hunt knocks on the head all the old notions of inorganic nature being inert and unchangeable. He shows that all matter, inorganic as well as organic, is in a state of activity, physical and chemical, which forbid us to speak of it as dead. Time keeping in London is rather too obstinately mechanical for a popular periodical. A gentleman somewhat profusely designating himself I. P. H. Bollen,

B. A. M. D., contributes an article entitled "Brain Weight and Brain Power." This deals with the plant of the human mind, and the Indian service, whom Bollen, &c., regard as having been "an exceptional man" intellectually and who had a brain weighing all but 60 ounces.

The Cellist is a most charming and philosophic paper on plant cells and their organization through the division of labor into a state-organism. "After the type of the industrial worker, which is cooperating on a footing of democratic equality to ennoble the raw material of lifeless nature and convert it into the precious and diversified production of life."

American
