Knight of the Barrow.

Cork Aristocrat Used to Peddle Coal in the Streets.

Sir Thomas Moore, Bart., Whose Family Has Come Upon Evil Days, is One of the Queerest Characters in Romantic Ireland.

Ireland has never lacked quaint and romantic personalities. Sir Thomas Moore is the owner of what must not be described as a mushroom title. It did not grow in a night nor was it conferred on him for any political service. Sir Thomas is no mere knight, he is a full-fledged baronet, but as in the case of many of the Irish aristocracy his title did not bring with it any of the rich things of this world. So Sir Thomas Moore, Bart., was obliged for quite a number of years to resort to the expedient of hawking coals for a living in the streets of the Rebel City, where he became a conspicuous character.

Sir Thomas' finances could not even reach the dignity of the usual horse and trolley, mostly adopted by coal hawkers in Cork streets. A donkey and barrow had to suffice, and from this barrow the baronet weighed out coal from 14 pounds upward to the democratic citizens of his native town.

There was however some satisfaction to Sir Thomas in feeling that his poor customers enjoyed the unusual honor of being served in this way by a real man of title, who moreover never manipulated the scales to the disadvantage of the buyer. They said he was a real "barrow knight."

Titles to Irishmen of honor have often proved to be more of an impediment than a source of income, and so it has proved in the case of Sir Thomas Moore. No consideration, financial or otherwise, could induce him to lend his authority to wild-cat schemes where his name might be an attraction on the front page of a company promoter's prospectus. Even the blandishments of American and English heiresses, anxious to annex a title, who flattered their money bags in the face of this impetuous baronet, failed for a considerable number of years to move him from the position he had taken up of earning a modest living by the obscure occupation of coal hawking.

An amusing story is related of an English society woman who came to Cork with the hope of persuading Sir Thomas to abandon bachelorhood. She invited him to dine with her at a local hotel. The baronet left his donkey and barrow round the next block and put in an appearance at the hotel covered in coal dust and with all the other traces of his occupation thick upon him. In spite of that, the lady was out for a title and was willing to take Sir Thomas to the nearest Registry Office, but no amount of beguiling or fascinating glances could soften the bachelor heart of the aristocratic coal dealer. "She came, she saw, but she did not conquer" was his observation when he told the story some time after.

But in spite of all his determination the day came when the proud old baronet succumbed to the blandishments of a fair lady of Scotch ancestry whom he married about a year ago. Matilda Elphinstone now Lady Moore, was the only daughter of Captain John G. Elphinstone who occupied a post in India under the Indian Civil Service. Like her husband, she has passed the years of frivolous and youthful romance, but she has brought her husband a small income which has enabled him to retire in his old age from his tiring occupation of carrying coals up the rickety staircases of Cork's tenement houses.

By the Way.

At Brighton, Mich., several days ago, Mr. and Mrs. James Avis, their two sons and two daughters knelt by the bedside of their son and brother, James, Jr., and kissed him a last goodbye. A post mortem proved that the young man died of rabies and to-day the family of six are patients at an Ann Arbor Institute.

One of the most fashionable restaurants at Warsaw was the scene of a notable raid recently, twenty-five armed men "holding up" the customers and eventually making off with a fine haul of money and jewellery. The raid was executed with considerable care and ingenuity, the men taking advantage of the dinner hour, when the place was well filled with diners, who were forced, at the point of the revolver, to sit still while they were robbed of everything easily portable. One waiter at the restaurant, who endeavored to notify the police, was killed by the robbers.

Like a blazing meteor an aeroplane at Arras, France, swooped from the clouds the other day. The startling accident occurred after aviator Lieutenant Galezowski had flown from Douai to Arras, and was about to fly back to Douai again without grounding. He was just over the town, and was circling preparatory to his return flight, when his aeroplane caught fire and came rushing to earth. It fell, a complete wreck, on the parade ground just outside the town, and to the amazement of the crowd which had gathered there, Lieutenant Galezowski crawled, quite unhurt, out of the wreckage of his machine.

Death of Geo. Rose.

LaMANCHE, P. B.

George Rose, of LaManche, died at his home after a brief illness, on November 23rd. Mr. Rose was 70 years of age at the time of his death. He had a most successful career. For a long time he was associated with the lead mines of LaManche. Whilst they were in operation he was a leader in directing the movements of the men employed there. During the past nineteen years he was in charge of the mail service between LaManche and Southern Harbor. Mr. Rose was conspicuous for his punctuality in the transmission of the mails on his circuit. At all times his genial manner and hospitable disposition won the approbation of the people of the settlements along the eastern shore. He was a kind father and devoted husband. Mr. Rose always made manifest a constant and proper love towards his home, his wife and children. He was a faithful attendant to his church. He belonged to the mission of St. Mary's, at Barron Island. His wife and several sons and daughters survive him. The funeral, which was held on Sunday, Nov. 26th, was one of the largest ever seen in that part of the country. The interment took place in St. Augustine's Cemetery, LaManche.

Not to Interfere.

In dealing with the case of Inspector J. J. Norris, of the Council, via a telegram for obstructing the official in the discharge of his duties, Judge Knight yesterday paid a meed of praise to Mr. Norris who is working energetically to keep Water Street and the public coves clean and with success. His Honour intimated that any person convicted of interfering with him in future would receive the full penalty which the law affords.
