The story of Morris Dillon and his game of cards was surely to be believed, being told by unimpeachable witnesses. The witness Ballantyne had declined to tell us in advance what he knew of this. We did not know what he would say before we put him in the box. According to his story, he had refused money to tell what he knew. My learned friend asked that this witness be believed. And what did he say? That he took two loads of ice up the front stairs on the morning of June 22; that Cooper and Billy Mason were charge; that he dumped it at the door just outside the attic; that the men inside opened the door and took it in; that through the door he recognized Frank Cameron, Hugh McGurdy, and George Stratfold.

MISSING WITNESSES.

"Is at possible and this took place without the knowledge of those in charge of the club, who were keen that day after voters of any class? If Carrothers took that man, a voter, to a saloon and treated an already drunken man; if he took that man, drunk enough for the police court, into the Conservative Club, was there not concerted action with reference to that class of voters?

OVERWHELMING EVIDENCE. "When we find the beer was taken there beforehand and stored in an empty warehouse; when we find the book, which would show who bought it, has disappeared; when we find the beer was moved up keg by keg; when we find my learned friend refraining from calling witnesses who are connected with these transactions, there is only one conclusion, and that conclusion brings it home as a scheme for which those in charge of those rooms were responsible-for which Dillon. Carrothers, Nash, are all responsible.

"They say Toothe stopped the affair when he heard of it. What did he stop? There were two things in that room-voters and illegal refreshments.

"WHAT DID TOOTHE DO? Did he put the beer out? He admits to Knowles, in which Cooper inclosed there were drunken voters on those $5. This, the respondent said, was pay premises, which he undertook to control. He might have sent for the out that it was his expenses for com-police, and said: 'These men are ing to London to give testimony, the drunk and disorderly; I want them put out.' If you find men on your premises fighting, screaming, yelling, do you confine them there, or do you purge your house of them? Toothe put men on the doors to do-what? Were those men brought here to show what their instructions were? Mr. Toothe was reckless, according to own account, in election matters. He is a man who has committed at

A few words with reference to the Detroit group. One can only again remind your lordships of the fact that Gravdon is sent from here to look after and arrange for a group of voters who confessedly would not come to vote in London at their own exto vote in London at their own expense. He knew the Norfolk voters his case, univers there is some fatal would not go a much shorter dis- charge, where corruption is proven betance without tickets. Did ne these men? Have we not a right to infer that the men would not come unless they had their expenses paid. Why send Mr. Graydon? not write to a railway man? Was it because Graydon had crossed the rubicon, and had already shown his willspectability, a man outside of poll-tics, whom they could trust? Mr. Osler referred to the straightforward evidence of the two Cartys, and asked their lordships if it was not too much to take Graydon's oath to purge the party. Graydon spent two days in Detroit hunting Lock-ington. He had driven miles and miles find him. Why? Because he had touched him or had not touched him? Does a man with a clear conscience go

CHASING, CHASING, CHASING the man whom he is said to have made an illegal transaction with?" It was a guilty conscience that sent Graydon on that errand. Mr. Osler showed that Ryckman, Fitzhenry, and Lockington agreed in the essentials of their story. They all said there was a ticket and $5, and that $3 50 was given to Lockington, and they were asked to believe that all these men paid their own expenses. Mr. Osler alluded to Cooper's letter for his testimony. Mr. Osler pointed ing to London to give testimony, the price of a ticket being $5 40. When the devil undertakes to rebuke sin. he does it with unction, and it was well for my learned friend, having regard to the deliberations he had in his own bag, to say, "You dodn't go far enough; you should have got it in the form Toothe settled it." (Laughter.) Toothe's me-

Mr. Osler then fastened agency on Harold Richardson. He pointed out that Richardson had been left instructions by Graydon and had been wired instructions by Toothe. Then Richardson had telephoned Graydon at the Conservative Club. Was not he reporting the result of his work? And Richardson had given Lloyd, a complete said he would not ask their lordships to admit every word of the evidence for the petitioner. He could not fairly ask their lordships to strain the evidence and find the case clearly proven against Mr. Westlake and Mr. Graydon.
