"Why I believe it's a fairy!" exclaimed Miss Emma Gretton, the younger,

The vigilance which had kept 25 budding women in order at once being now all concentrated upon his solitary mite, she was drilled and instructed and improved with a watch instructed and improved with a watchful yet kindly strictness which subdued the impulsive manners and kept under naughty babe was to be seen in the reserved and studious girl that at 12 years old she had become

In spite of the wise objections of the Misses Gretton, he insisted that Norfolk, and Copsley, which was in Suffolk—though the prim and shy girl with pigtail and school-room apron had lost, for a time at least, a good deal of the charm of the fascinating and

During the very first week of Deldee's departure from Waringham, Mas-ter James made his appearance on the top of the high garden wall of the dull ooking old house in Copsley just at the moment when the girl, fearless and mischievous as usual, having escaped into the narrow and now flowerless by trying to take away a bone from a big dog that was chained up there. Just as James, untidy, breathless, and covered with mud, slid down the wall, and ran up to her, Miss Gretton appeared at the back drawing-room window, and, not unnaturally mistaking the boy for some undesirable acquaintance Deldee had picked up fore her rise in life, she hurried the poor boy through the house and out at the door without listening to his explanations. Tired and mortified, he got back to Waringham, partly on his weary feet, partly by the help of a friendly cart. On his way he came to grand resolution; and the next morning, when Sir Charles had mumbled through prayers in his usual inaudible tones, his nephew made a nervous rush at him as he was leaving the room, and at him as he was leaving the room, and jerked out, in a choking voice:

"Uncle Charles, I found her—I hrought her here! Oughtn't they to let

Please make them. His uncle stopped and looked down on him. He was not fond of the boy. He had a curious prejudice against him from the very day when two years before, he had taken the boy to Waringham on the death of his young-er brother, Master James' father; but his sense of justice told him that there was reason in his nephew's words. Once a week thenceforward James was driven over to Copsley to eat cake and enjoy Deldee's society in the stiff drawr-room, in the stately presence of her two guardians, who thought him a very gentlemanly boy, but rather old-fashioned in his manners. But when the two ladies went to the seaside every almond rock which she was eating, to all the grave propositions he was making to her, denoted a lightness of mind which spoke iil for her constancy.

"You are a giddy girl, Deldee!" said he, patronizingly. "You don't understand things haif as well as I did when I was your age. But, then, of course, you're a girl; and that makes a difference. Well, I must speak to you about it when you are older."

about it when you are older."
But alas for human inconsistency! At Winchester the lonely boy found him-self in a new world, among new occupations, new pleasures. His sturdy, clumsy form grew straight, supple, and athletic in the playground, his facility in learning made his progress in the school brilliant, while his gentle easily-led disposition gave him danger-ous popularity. When he returned to Waringham, at each successive vaca-tion taller, handsomer, and with a better report of his college successes, he did indeed still submit fondly to Deldee's caprices, and continue to remind her that she was to marry him when she grew up, but at each return there was a shade more of fun in his proposal and a shade more of seriousness in her acceptance of it, until, when he, a big, bright, good-looking lad of 17, took The Misses Cretton, who had been recommended by the Vicar of Waringham as the very persons for such a task as that of turning the willful waif into a model young lady, with all the latest improvements, were two middle-latest improvements, who had formerly kent a gray silent and awkward and tried to

And he had not the least idea serious speech had upon the passion-ate, imaginative child-woman. She remained in France four years, having provided, at the suggestion of Miss Gretton, with a surname. After having considered the matter carefully some days, Sir Charles-without mentioning the fact to his sisters-had given her one of the family names, and sent her to school at St. Denis as Miss Geraldine Lindley. She expressed some surprise on learning that Gretton, which she had used as her own, was not her name; but, having been told long before that she was the orphan daughter of two dear friends of Sir Charles, this fact awoke no suspicion in her mind. She did not come to England for any holidays-this had been insisted on by Sir Charles' sister Elizabeth, who grew fiercer each year in her resentment against the girl who had taken so much of her brother's love, and, far the wild spirit, until, after some years worse, of his money. This he agreed to passed in their care, no trace of the the more readily, as it put off the approaching day when the girl he loved as his own child must make the ter-During all those nine years Sir Charles He had not reckoned for this difficulty never failed, except on one occasion, when an irresistible impulse of ten-when a slight seizure of some sort derness and admiration had made him when a slight seizure of some sort derness and admiration had made and which frightened the household by a adopt the beautiful little waif and of the parties to the controversy. was to be kept in entire ignorance of the truth, that she was not to know that he himself lived near, and that his sisters were never to be mentioned to her. She was to be made to believe that he came from a distance to see her. James was bound to be equally silent, and as, besides being by nature honorable, he knew Deldee was not to be trusted with a secret, he was disreet; and, though she knew his home was with Sir Charles, she did not know where that home was, for she had no recollection of Waringham Hall.

As, during those four inquiring, self-tormenting transition years of a girl's life from 12 to 16, Deldee was surrounded by people who could tell her nothing about her parentage and her prospects she lived in happy ignorance of her own history; while a certain natural reserve and distinction of manner, which increased the effect of her beauand accomplishments, gave rise to belief among her companions that she was "an heiress," a belief which in time naturally affected her also, and seemed the reasonable explanation of the semi-conventual care which had guarded her childhood. At last, as Miss Gretton took no notice of the more than had been told her about her parents and position, the girl girl wrote more boldly, begging Miss Gret-ton to let her know whether certain had been a brother-officer of his own, who had not been very well off, but who had been able to leave her proper-ly provided for; he himself was her rustee and guardian, and there was no need for her to stint herself in any a young lady's little wants and

Special Cable Letter to The Advertiser. London, March 20.-In consequence of the mission of Mr. Charles Fitzpatrick, Solicitor-General of Canada, to this country, and of the visit to Rome of Mr. Fitzpatrick and Mr. Charles Russell, the English solicitor of the Canadian Government, and son of the Chief Justice, Baron Russell of Killowen Monsignor Merry Del Val, the papal delegate to Canada, sails from Livthe Cunard Line steamship Umbria, tion. Mgr. Del Val is distinguished looking, about 32 years of age, and of courtly manners. He is evidently a man who will hear all sides, and when he reaches a decision he will put his foot down in the firmest manner. He is Rome, and his mother is Spanish, but her ancestors come from county Wa-

He has never before been in America, is a membe of the Pope's family residing at the Vatican, is private chamberlain to Pope Leo, and was made a domestic prelate to the Pope before starting, as additional proof of the confidence which his Holiness reposes in him. Mgr. Del Val, consequently, goes to Canada in complete touch with the Pope's ideas. In conversation with a representative of Associated Press yesterday, Mgr.

Del Val said: "My mission is one of peace. I go ppen-minded, and desire to hear all sides. I have no intention to do anything but remove the controversy by finding a modus vivendi agreeable to all, and based on right and justice. THE DIAMOND JUBILEE. The celebration of the Queen's diamond jubilee, otherwise the 60th anniversary of her Majesty's accession to the throne, rivals even the eastern crisis in public attention. Preparations for the event are going on everywhere in London. The Queen's procession will be rehearsed early during the morning of Tuesday next.

Insurance companies are insur ing sightseers against loss owing to small extravagances in dress in which the abandonment of the procession or a she had indulged were justified by her prospects. The old lady showed this letter gravely to Sir Charles, who said he would reply to it. But he had not the heart to rebuke her, to warn her; he merely wrote to say that, in answer papers are publishing a special column to her very natural questions, it was time for her to know that her father of 1837, the year of the Queen's accession to the throne, are being revived.

A Vote Will Be Taken on the U. S. Tariff.

Meantime Day and Night Sessions Will Be Held-Chairman Dingley's Statement.

Washington, March 20 .- The House by 179 to 132 (Democrats and Populists in the minority) adopted a rule providing for sessions beginning at o'clock each day, with sessions at night, for debate on the tariff bill, the amendments at 3 p.m., March 3 The report accompanying the tariff bill which was presented in the House was written by Mr. Dingley. It is a lengthy document, in which he cusses the necessity for increased revenue and the anticipated effect on trade of the various schedules. Among other things, he says:

"In revising the several dutiable schedules, as a rule the duties have been fixed at points between the tariff of 1890 and the present tariff, it hav-ing been found that on account of changed conditions in a large part of the articles duties lower than those of metal and cotton schedules are in large part the same as the present tariff he increases above those rates being in the more advanced articles. The agricultural, earth i ware, and glass and the silk, liquor, wool and woolen schedules are substantially the same as in the tariff of 1890, the duties on fruit having been increased. "The manufactured lumber, which was put on the free list by the tariff of 1894, has been transferred to the dutiable list, and in the interest of revenue, with little change in duties except on white pine, which has been restored to the duty of 1883. The aim has been to make the duties specific, or at least part specific wherever practicable, not only to protect the revenue against undervaluation frauds, but also to give our own industries the tariff, and in carrying out this policy have had the sympathy and aid of reputable importers. This has been for the most part in the chemical, glass, iron and steel, lumber, sugar, tobacco, agriculture, liquor, cotton, flax and jute, woollen, silk, paper and sundries schedules. Such articles as wool, lumber, burlaps, bags and salt have been restored dutiable list, from which they should never have been removed.

In our daily newspaper notes we advertise nothing we haven't got, and we promise nothing we're not prepared to

The crowds who visited our Linen Counter the last three days expected something wonderful from reading our advertisement, and they weren't disappointed. In nearly every instance they expressed astonishment at the values offered.

For Friday and Saturday Ladies' Gloves, Hosiery and Underwear claim special notice. The hands in these departments are particularly enthusiastic about the beauty and quality of their stock, and no wonder. These are extensive departments, and play a very important part in the economy of the Big Store,

With a special price list for these two days the hands will have a busy time of it, and ladies who patronize this section will find a more extensive stock and prices a little lower than elsewhere.

Just opened another case of veilings, new shades, at the same popular price as last. They're on sale now, but won't be here long.
