THE INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUP

Members of Knox Presbyterian Church in Favor of It.

Pass Resolution Advising the Adoption of the Innovation-Mr. Alexander's Interesting Paper.

The introduction of the individual cup in the administration of communion was the subject of discussion at a meeting held last night in the lecture room of Knox Presbyterian Church, South London. The meeting, while not large, was sufficiently so to be representative of the congregation, and, as one of the speakers expressed It, those who were not present were evidently satisfied to leave the question with those who were. Judging by the practical unanimity of the meeting, it will not be long before Knox Church adopts the individual cup, and It is probable that its example will be followed by other congregations. Most of those who took part in the discussion of Mr. Thomas Alexander's well-prepared paper on the subject ex-pressed themselves as unqualifiedly in lavor of the principle, and the balance did not place themselves in opposition, but merely counseled that the matter be given very careful consideration before adoption

MR. ALEXANDER'S PAPER. The chair was occupied by the pastor, Rev. J. G. Stuart. After the usual devotional exercises, Mr. Thos. Alexander was called upon to read the following paper:

Alexander was called upon to read the following paper:

It is to be regretted that a member of this council better qualified than myself had not been named to write a paper on this subject, for it is, to my mind, one of the most important that has ever come before this council, and I feel my own mability to present it in the manner that its importance demands.

To make a change in any practice that has prevailed in religious worship requires careful consideration and caution, lest offense should be given to the feelings of the humblest worshiper, and no pains should be spared in making a change to elicit the views of all concerned to avoid even the appearance of coercion, and everything possible should be done to reconcile all differences which would likely arise. I am not sufficiently acquainted with church history to know how long the present mode of administering the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper has prevailed in the Presbyterian Church, but it is sufficient to know that it reaches back a great number of years. We must, therefore, approach this subject with all due reverence, for there are associated with it many hallowed memories that carry us back to the days of our earliest childhood, when we were permitted to observe the solemnity and reverence of this most impressions are then the subscript of the church sacraments. Those impressions are reverence that characterized the observ-ance of this most impressive of the church sacraments. Those impressions are present with us today, and years cannot efface them from among our sweetest

Great changes have been made in our modes of worship, and I sometimes doubt whether some of those changes have not been more of a detriment than a benefit

It is not many years ago—in fact, it is within the memory of many here present—when to have even hinted at introducing intrumental music into a Presbyteriar Church would have been a signal for disruption; and the introduction of instrumental music is today looked upon by not a few, and I record myself among the number, as one of the innovations that has proved of doubtful benefit.
I am old enough to remember the time when there was no instrumental music in many of the Presbyterian churches, and am of the opinion that there was in many cases better congregational singing in those days than there is now. It may be that the singing was perhaps not so artistic but it was certainly more fervent Church would have been a be that the singing was perhaps have artistic, but it was certainly more ferven and inspiring, for there was no silen voices among the congregation, and misunderstandings with the organists and choirs. And I am free to admit that the mode of passing the Communion cup from one to another is perhaps more impressive than if the individual cups were

We, as Christians, however, have a duty to perform, and if, with the knowledge that God has given us, we unnecessarily continue a practice in our religious ceremonies which we know to be injuriceremonies which we know to be injurious to the body, while of benefit to the soul, we are doing that which God does not require us to do; rather let us seek to carry out his will by doing those things which are good for the soul without injury to the body.

Scientific investigation has revealed to its many physical dangers to which humanity has up to recently been exposed, and has pointed out the means by which those dangers may be avoided. Think those dangers may be avoided. Thin of what medical science has done is averting those terrible epidemics which have more than once devastated Europe Cholera, that fell hag that marched torch in hand, into the seaports of Europe, carrying death and sorrow in Europe, carrying death and sofrow in her path, and scattering its destroying seed broadcast on the land, is now almost a thing of the past, and is relegated to the far-off eastern land of Asia, where the demon of disease seems to fight its last fight. Yellow fever, at one time the scourge of the south, is now told by our quarantine laws: "Thus far shalt those go, and no farther." Smallpox, the dread of rich and poor alike, often selects for its victims the most becauseous form, it not to take it down to death, to at least its victims the most beauteous form, in to take it down to death, to at least mar or destroy its beauty forever. Now by vaccination, its ravages are cribbed, cabined and confined. Diphtheria, too that dreadful disease that takes for its prey the lambs of the flock, is now largely isolated and yields to anti-toxine. The White Plague is with us today; it has made fearful strides on our land, and those in authority are being awakened by its ravages. The fact having been thoroughly established that consumption. le & contagious disease, the people have IT IS IMPORTANT

Catarrh is the short route to consumption, and the importance of early and judicious treatment of catarrh, whether located in the head, throat or bronchial tubes, cannot be too strongly emphasized.

The list of catarrh cures is as long as the moral law and the forms in which they are administered, numerous and confusing, from sprays, inhalers, washes, eintments, and salves to powders, liquids and tablets.

The tablet form is undoubtedly the most convenient and most effective, but with nearly all advertised catarrh remedies it is almost entirely a matter of guess work as to what you are taking into your system, as the proprietors, while making all sorts of been presented with an individual cup claims as to what their medicines will service, but it had never been used. o, always keep it a close secret as to afflicted to those sanitariums." Meetings are being held in different sections to discuss these matters. One, as you know, was recently held in this city, and the movement in favor of a sanitarium was almost unanimously indorsed.

In view of all these things we cannot but ask, What is the Church of Christ doing to aid in this laudable work? Is she by her mode of administering the Lord's Supper helping to spread disease? Lord's Supper helping to spread disease? Are consumptives excluded from the Lord's table? Certainly not; it would be religious tyranny to exclude them. But Lord's table? Certainly not; it would be religious tyranny to exclude them. But there should be a way of safety provided for them. Do they partake of the wine from the same cup as the young, the strong, the vigorous? They do. Can disease be spread from one to another in this way? Medical science says it can; that the sputting of consumptives is loadthis way? Medical science says it can; that the sputum of consumptives is loaded with tubercle bacilli, which can be conveyed to persons drinking from the same cup as those afficted with the disease. It is recorded that the wine remaining in the Communion cup after being passed among the communicants, when subjected to analysis, was proved to consider that had been guidence that had been guidence. ain germs of disease that had been gath ared from among those who drank from ne cup. peptie, and the lips of those with decayed teeth and fetid breath, and of those addicted to the use of tobacco? The sick, if at all possible, will go to the Communion table to renew their vows, it may be for the last time. Is it, then, reasonable, to expect that women of delicate tastes can sit down to the Communion table and enjoy its spiritual benefits under such conditions as I have pointed out? Someone will say: "All such thoughts and feelings should be banished." But this is advising an impossibility. Another will say: "With the blessing of God you need not fear contagion." Well, this may be good enough for the Christian Scientists, but to good sound Presbyterians the better advice would be to "Bear in mind that God helps those who help themselves." The pagan Indian cortures his body in ignorance to appease the wrath of the Great Spirit; we, with a full knowledge of the dangers we run, continue a practice in our worship that is not called for by any rule or doctrine of the church, which does not speak well or our progress in religious things. An appinion largely prevails that Christ and his apostles used only one cup. There is little or no foundation for such an opinion, and even if there were, the cirumstances were quite different, and the number partaking very limited. The very act that the used of the single communion cup has been departed from, and hat many congregations use more than ne cup, is an admission that there is good reason why the number of cups hould not be extended so that an inditidual cup could be given to each communicant. dual cup could be given to each com-

A moldering branch is cut from a tree because it is a hindrance to its growth and detracts from its beauty. So the administering of the Lord's Supper, as it obtains in the great majority of the churches today, it like the moldering branch of the tree, and should be lopped off. It is a hindrance to the growth of the church, for there are those who rehurch, for there are those who re-away from the Lord's table on ac-Let us, then, add to the reverence and spiritual enjoyment of the Lord's Supper by using the individual cups; and so we will be more able to concentrate our thoughts upon that seene when our Saviour, "the same night on which he was betrayed took the cup when he had supped, saying. This cup is the new testament in my blood. This do ye as often as ye drink it in remembrance of me." Using Catarrh Medicines.

THE DISCUSSION Mr. Alex. Stuart started the interesting discussion which followed. He said that after hearing the paper read there could be little difference of opinon among those present as to the course to be followed. The old method was undoubtedly unpleasant and repugnant to many persons, and some even avoid taking of the communion on that account. The only questions rolunteered were those of convenience

In reply to a question from one of those present, as to whether St. James' Church had not adopted and then abandoned the individual cup, the pastor stated that St. James' Church had Mr. Alex. McQueen believed that as in favor of the individual cups. In answer to a question, Mr. Alexander said the cost of an individual service would be inconsiderable—from $25 to $75. The cups can be procured as low as 50 cents per dozen. He instanced the Central Presbyterian Church, Hamilton, and the First Congregational Church of this city, as having adopted the individual cups. Messrs. J. M. McEvoy and Charles Morton, while personally in favor of the innovation, wished to see a ple-biscite taken of the whole congregation, so that no section of it should eel slighted or ignored.

Mr. Alex. Stuart moved, seconded by Mr. W. H. Weston, that in the opinion of the meeting the congregation of Knox Church should adopt the individual communion cup and the in-dividual allotment of bread, and that the meeting recommend to the session and the board of management the adoption of the same.. The motion carried unanimously.

The meeting closed with the Doxlogy and the Benediction.

New York, March 4.- The latest reports about King Edward's health are reassuring, says the London correspondent of the Tribune. His throat has been examined by Sir Felix Semon, and the recent disturbing rumors have been pronounced to be groundless. Sir Felix is the German throat specialist, who has been appointed physician extraordinary to the King, and has been naturalized as a British subject. The King's general health is good. He has not suffered from the pressure of public business.
