A number of people who witnessed the accident hurried over and picked Player up, and he was rushed at once to St. Joseph's Hospital.

At the time it was not known who he was, but by means of a bank book, dated Mount Brydges, and a railroad pass from Carados to Inwood, his identity was discovered and his relatives were notified.

Dr. Stevenson, who attended Player, found that he had a small fracture at the base of the ikuli, and that he had suffered severe internal injuries to the chest. Death was probably due to the chest. Death was found that Player had cotton batting in his ears, and it is thought that this was what prevented him from hearing the appropriate the palace in a proposed to place a seven per cent preference stock by a five per cent destroy and the base of the ikuli and that he had a small fracture at the palace and march to the cathedral door.
