Of course, Sir Robert's little outburst may be only an and an investigation might prove only the good faith of the Government's chapel house, cathedral, on the street transactions and the innocence of everybody connected therewith. But there is a strong feeling on the part of some Conservative politicians that a general would be a good thing for the Government, and they may be looking for some deavor. This is a good sign. It is true, not orite indulgence? only in Prussia and Germany, but in every civilized country in the world, that the average man, the vast majority of men, are opposed to war. Universal peace has been the dream of most of the world's great men. At the mint at Paris is a medal struck by Bonaparte, when First Consul the motto of which is "Paix de l'univers," and Mr. Pitt said about one hundred and thirty years ago, "The time is at hand, when, conformably to the will of Providence, the two great nations of France and England will show the world that they were made to cherish relations of mutual beneficence and friendship."

France and England came together, but while the old wounds were healing, Germany was preparing to strike not only at them both, but if need be the whole world.

The key to the situation is in Dr. Liebknecht's words, "You have no right to speak in the name of the people." Only the people themselves have that right. Until Germany's people can govern themselves, similarly to the British, French and American people, there will be no actual voice of the people in Germany.

It is from the people that the vast majority of great men come.
