known as the "deputy mayor," house keeper at the city buildings, died after long illness. The deputy-mayor was an old man at the time of his death. He left considerable real estate behind hin, and rumor also says that he owned a neat amount of personalty. Three years before his death the deceased deputy contracted a marriage with a Whitby widow named Elizabeth Smith. She was apparently about 45 and not bad looking for left an open question. The matrimonial ceremonies performed in the city hall by Rev. Mr. Sansom, and the attaches of the building wished the deputy and his bride every happiness. But the match proved a very unhappy one, and after a ten days honeymoon, according to the story that the widow told in Chief Justice Jameron's court vesterday afternoon, the lepaty inaugurated a series of indignities owards her which wound up by their wards her which together for one paration after living together for one ar, Mrs. Argue being allowed $500, ider circumstances which resulted in a decreated for suit against the estate of deceased for suit against the estate of deceased for dowry. This suit was begun yes-terday before Chief Justice Cameron and a jury. The defendants are Robt. Dunlop, Ann Harris and Alexandria Argue (grandaughters of deceased), and Thos. Biggs. James Reeve appeared for plaintiff and C. R. W. Bigger for the defence. The plaintiff a evidence in brief was that
