(CONTINUED FROM 1ST PAGE.) experience of the bill in England was seen, but after considering the question, he had come to the conclusion that Canada did not need the ballot.

Mr. Bodwell thought experience clearly showed that there were men who would be unduly influenced in the exercise of the franchise, and to remedy this, and for other reasons, the ballot was necessary. He spoke at great length, merely repeating, however, the arguments previously adduced.

Mr. Dodge desired to say a word or two on the subject, as he would vote one way while feeling strongly the other way, and he desired to explain this apparent inconsistency. He believed it desirable that every man should feel his personal responsibility in the matter of voting, and that he should not be afraid of coming out openly and straightforwardly, and vote in accordance with his convictions. He had seen open voting in England, and the ballot in Australia and the States, and he could say, and in this he defied contradiction, that wherever the ballot had been in force it had deteriorated, to a large extent, the character of the public men of the country. He thoroughly despised every sort of bribery, but he believed the ballot would in no way tend to put it down; nor did he think the ballot would be any benefit to his employees, as his interest and theirs was the same, and he only voted for the ballot so as to be able to say to his men that he had given them an opportunity of trying what he really believed would prove anything but a benefit to them.

Mr. Patterson, of Brant, regretted that the member for North York should vote for a measure of which he-said he disapproved. Referring to the remarks of the member for Pictou he did not think he had made good his case. Whatever might be the case in Nova Scotia bribery was well known in Ontario, and called for some remedy which ought to be provided, if possible, no matter what had been the course in England. A large percentage of votes was known to remain unpolled, simply because the voters did not desire to be known as opposing either candidate; but let the voting be secret, and no compulsion would be necessary. He hoped a perfect measure would be passed on the subject.

The members were then called in and the vote taken as follows:—Yeas, 78; Nays, 55. YEAS-Messrs. Hor Mr. Tilley asked whether the bill wout se proceeded with further, the leader of the Government having stated that if the principle were affirmed, it would be included in his election bill.

The bill was then ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Mackenzie thought the Government should state their intention on the subject, and the mode in which they intended to carry out the matter, as soon as possible.
