

The veterinary department at an agricultural college is one of the fundamental problems of breeding nutrition and disease, offers better opportunities at present for the trained specialist than heretofore. Special attention is given to the development of definite fields of specialization within the work since the greatest need is for men fitted to take junior investigational positions. Of course, only the desirable type of student should be encouraged to go in for investigational work. Others may be offered opportunities to develop along lines of specialization to fit them for commercial or production activities.
