As the English made no Satisfaction to M. Contiecaur, he, upon receiving Instructions from the Marquis du Quesne, endeavoured to discover the Place where the Murderers had retired to. He was informed that Major Washington, with his Detachment, was in a little Fort which the English had built, and called Fort Necessity, where he waited the Arrival of some new Troops that were destined to come and attack Fort du Quesne. He thereupon fent out a Detachment to recover, if possible, the French Prisoners, or at least to oblige the English to withdraw from the Lands belonging to the French. M. de Villiers, the Brother of M. de Jumonville, was charged with that Commission, and the Instructions given him were entirely confined to that. He was also expressly commanded, not to use any Violence, if the English would withdraw.

He left Fort du Quesne the 28th of June, and having passed the Place where the Murder was committed, and where the Bodies of the French fill lay; he arrived the third of July, in Sight of Fort Necessity. The English, who were without the Fort, fired a Volley, and retired into it. The Fort was immediately invested, and attacked: The Fire was very hot, but M. Villiers put a Stop to it about eight o'Clock at Night, in order to propose to the English a Surrender, to avoid an Affault, which would have exposed them to all the Cruelties of the Indians, even in Spight of the French. The Proposal was accepted, and the Capitulation drawn up. The French would not make them Prisoners, because they did not look on themselves as at War. They only demanded, that those who escorted M. Jumonville should be returned. Major Washington engaged to fend them to Fort du Quesne, and gave Hostages for the Performance of his Promise. In fine, the English were suffered to depart with one Piece of Cannon, and all their Effects. § They themselves acknow-ledged, in the first Article of that Capitulation, that the Fury ag Design of the French was only to revenge the Assassination of-a French Officer, the Carrier of a Summons. The Capitulation § See No. 9.
