We make no affertions—we draw no conclufions.—But let us fuppofe, that inftead of fich measures as became the Representative of Majefty—the Viceroy, forgetful that "the great can "never find fafety in humiliation ; that pow-"er, eminence, and confideration, are things "not to be begged ; and that the high who fup-"plicate for favor or indulgence from the mean, "can never hope for juffice through themfelves," had fought for the vain fhadow of popularity, by facrifices to the discontented, and by deferting the cause of order, and of those with whom from his station, he was connected in duty and interest, and whom from honor and principle, he should have held himself bound to support.

Let us suppose, that not fatisfied with being at all times acceffable and fubmiffive to the factious, he even feduloufly fought them out, and always accosted them with encouraging falutations ; & even honored (as far as honour could be conferred on another by one who had difregarded it for himfelf) with cordial and viceroyal greetings, and fqueezes of the hand, the most malevolent of the crufaders against judicial authority and regal privileges. Thus practifing every form and meannefs of tamiliarity as a part of the fyftem on which the dignified fructure of his popularity was to be raifed. But what, it will be asked became of this towering edifice of Plebeian favor obtained at the expence of fo much time and honor
