isdiction.

Mr. Doolan's answer was to the effect that any such move would end in the open rebellion of the Canadian body, who have no intention whatever to be dictated to by citizens under the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. Doolan told The World that on account of British labor's ignorance of Canadian affairs, a delegation of four was already on its way from England to inquire into conditions. This delegation was appointed at the convention of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, which was held in Man-Engineers, which was held in Manchester, England. This convention opened on June 9 and continued for nine weeks. It revised the rules of the organization and dealt with matthe organization and dealt with matters of importance. Aitho no invitation had been offered, the International Association of Machinists of America sent Vice-President J. A. McClelland and F. Hewitt, editor of The Machinists Journal, to appear before this convention and to make a claim on behalf of their organization. These delegates made a good attempt to show the representatives of the A.S.E. that the I.A.M. was perfection itself, and claimed that their union should have jurisdiction over the A.S.E. in this country.
