MEN WHO PLAY ANIMALS.

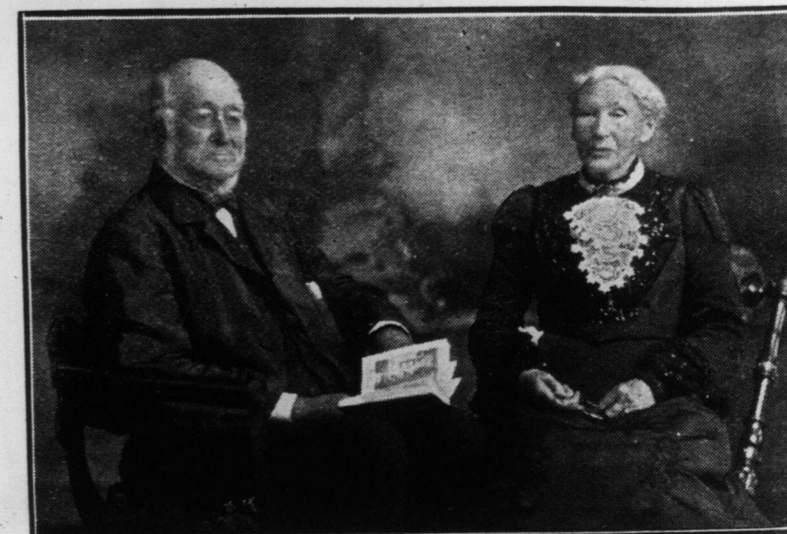

Almost without exception, the men who play animal parts on the stage are Englishmen. Most of them have been acrobats. All of them have eyes that laugh and limbs that instinctively do comic things. So here, at least, is a class of Englishmen who have the sense of humor.
 "How does it happen that we 'animals' are all Englishmen?" laughed Arthur Hill, who plays the friendly bear in "The Top o' th' World." "Why, because there is so much of that sort of work in English pantomime. That's the way we get started, and, once started, and successful, we sort of hang on to the 'beastly' parts. The very one seems to enjoy seeing a man enact the role of an animal, few realize the nature of the work. In the first place, we animal actors all create our own parts. There is very little written for us to do. We are expected to make up as the rehearsals progress toward the opening of the play. This is hard, for unless an animal part is made really funny, the audience takes no interest in it.
 "Then, the man who is playing the animal must really feel the part. Inside my bearskin I do everything which by pulling strings, I make the bear do. If Mr. Bear winks, I wink. If he opens his mouth wide, you can rest assured that I am stretching my own jaws to the limit. Often I think I am foolish, but, to tell the truth, I can't help myself. A sort of subconsciousness makes me do all these things. Altho I am out of sight of the audience, I cannot help but think that the fact that I am acting makes my bear performances more realistic."
