DE FONTENOY

King Alfonso Wins and Gambling Place is Closed —The Duke of Fife's Affairs—Canadians Hon-

King Alfonso and his mother, Queen Marie Christine, have at length succeeded in having their way and, in deference to their pensistent pressure, the Spanish government has issued a decree for the immediate closing of the great public gambling establishment at San Sebastin. Known as the Casino, it was instituted about the year 1908, by the objectionable Marquet, after he had been compelled by the Belgian government and legislature to close his gambling place at Ostend, in spite of his possessing the silent support of the late King Leopold II.

By wholesale bribery he was able to secure a footing at San Sebastian from the venal municipality and naturally attracted to this watering-place, which for twenty years or more had been the favorite summer resort of the king and his mother, all the scum and riff-raff of Europe, for whom even Monte Carlo was too decent and respectable. Their presence naturally spoiled San Sebastian for the court, and the royal family to such an extent that the king declared that if that sort of thing continued, he would cease going there.

When the gambling establishment was there.

When the gambling establishment was first instituted, the government of the day turned a deaf ear to he royal protests, insisting that political party considerations rendered it impossible for it to offend the city authorities of San Sebastian, by a rigorous enforcement of the anti-gambling laws. Fortunately, the present premier, Canalejas, feels himself strong enough to deal with the situation in accordance with the law of the land, and the wishes of its sovereign.

As for Marquet, he is reaping so great a harvest from the tables which he was permitted to set up in the new Heliopolis, suburb of Cairo, that he can afford to regard with indifference the closing of his casino at San Sebastian. His one dread now is that Lord Kitchener may drive him out, and that he may be obliged to fall back upor his only remaining gambling hells, namely, those in Portugal, which date from the beginning of the republican regime.

ince with long-established British custom, his father's minor title of Viscount Macluff.

Since no mention is made of him or his sons in any standard "Peerage," or other work of reference, it should be explained that the founder of the Duff family, of which the late duke was the chief, was William Duff, born in 1697, who was member of parliament for Banffshire during the reign of George II. It was this monarch who cerated him, first, Lord Braco of Kilbride in County Cavan, and then Viscount MacDuff and Earl Fife (not Earl of Fife, since he had nothing to do with the County of Fife.)

These honors were bestowed chiefly in recognition of his services to the Hanoverian cause against that of the Stuarts. The first Lord Fife had six sons. The eldest predeceased him; the second, James, succeeded as second earl, and, dying without issue, left his honors to the third brother, Alexander, from whom the late Duke of Fife was descended.

The fourth brother was the Hon. George Duff, who married Frances Dalzell, daughter of Gibson Dalzell, and granddaughter of General Robert Dalzell. The "Peerages" say that there was a son born to this union, named George, but do not mention what became of him. This son entered the ministry, and received the degree of doctor of divinity from the University of Edinburgh. He married Miss Ogilvy, and their son was Colonel Daniel Duff of the East India Company's service. Daniel married Miss Huyter, and the only issue of this union was the present heir, Jekyll Duff, late of the Indian Police, and now of Melbourne.

As the birth of his grandfather, George, is on the register of the House of Lords, all he needs to do in order to obtain the family honors is to prove the legitimacy of his own birth, and that of his father, Daniel But according to English law the establishment of these proofs would have to be made before the committee of privileges of the House of Lords, by the agency of the highest-priced members of the English bar. Indeed, simple as is the succession in this case, it would involve t

Buckner, Mo.—"For more than a year I suffered agonies from female troubles and the doctors at last decided there was no help for me unless I went to the hospital for an operation. I was awfully against that operation, and as a last resort wrote to you for special advice and I told you just what I suffered with bearing down pains, I was short of breath, had smothered spells, felt dull and draggy all the time. I could not touch my foot to the floor without screaming. I was short of breath, had smothered spells, felt dull and draggy all the time. I could not do any work, and oh how I dreaded to have an operation.

"I received a letter full of kind advice, which I followed, and if I had only written her a year ago I would have been saved so much suffering, for today I am a well woman. I am now keeping house again and do every bit of my own work. Every one in this part of the country knows it was Lydia E. quiesced.

"Come, Marjorie," she called. "It's half past seven and you know you didn't get to bed until nine last night or the night before. I want you to start promptly tonight.'

"Oh, mother," from Marjorie, "please let me sit up just a few minutes more. I want to finish this chapter."

"No, Marjorie, now please don't tease. You know what you promised me last night."

Marjorie carefully marked her place; closed her book and tood up. Then she looked outside the window and caught sight of the family cat outside on the piazza. "Oh, mother, don't you want me to get Tom in? You know you said you didn't want him to stay out nights?"

"Well you may if you'll hurry," weakened Marjorie's mother.

It took ten minutes to bring Tom in, to show him off and finally dispose of him on the couch.

Five minutes more were used in saying good-night to me.

Again my hostess reminded Marjorie that she had promised to start promptly tonight and this time arose to accompany her up the stairs. On the way they passed the piano, 'Clever Marjorie caught at the last straw to save her from the ignomy of sinking into oblivion. "Oh, mother, I want to play Miss Cameron my new piece," she said. Maternal pride struggled with discipline. Maternal pride won a quick victory. Marjorie played that piece and two others and artfully managed to turn the conversation upon the coming recital in which, to her mother's vast satisfaction, she was to be the youngest pupil and to play twice.

At eight-twenty-five Marjorie actually started up-stairs to bed.

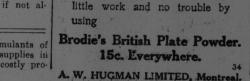

Marjorie is certainly a very clever little musician, but I should not advise having her trained for that profession. I think it would be wiser to have her prepare for a diplomatic career. Women will probably have entered diplomacy by the time she is of age and she will surely make her mark in it.

A word to the child who wants to control his parents; sulking will accomplish some good and teasing more, and there are a few parents who can be managed by open disobedience, but the very best trick of all, when you don't want to mind, is to distract your father's or mother's attention; study his or her weaknesses, and nine times out of ten you can defer obedience indefinitely, if not altogether escape it.
