THE HOME

Dear little feet! In a few years To tread life's path, 'mid smiles or tears, With cheerful laugh or anxious fears?

Oh! little hands, stretched out in play! What shall they grasp each passing day, Things that will fade or fade away?

Sweet baby eyes, with questions bright! What will they learn to read aright, Here, where earth's troubles dim the light?

Where leads thy path from this fair morn? Through clover land, with stone and thorn, Or 'mid the flowers and golden corn?

We were left to our own devices, Yearning to look on it, may not be, Sweet comfort, though we cannot see, God knoweth.

Only keep close to Christ's dear side, Through life's way, glad or surging tide, And safely homeward he will guide— God knoweth.

Some years after Edward Burke's first marriage he presented the following eulogium to his wife, of whom it is said to have been the last portrait.

The sketch depicts the harmonization of mental and physical perfections difficult to attainment, and of undoubted rarity. It may be at least commended to our readers as the most perfect portrait of a woman that has ever been painted.

She is beautiful in her countenance, serene in her features, from complexion, or from shape. She has all these in a high degree, but it is not by these she attracts a heart; it is all that sweetest of temper, sweetest of innocence, and sweetest of ability which give her the charm that fascinates her beauty.

She has a face that just raised your attention at first sight; it grows on you every moment and you wonder it did not more than raise your attention at first. Her eyes have a mild light, but they are like the pieces of a diamond.

It is our every-day life that decides what kind of Christians we are. We cannot form a proper estimate of Christian character by seeing our friends now and then, or passing a day or two in their society at intervals.

We are generally thrown into the society of our friends upon pleasant occasions. We meet them upon life's holidays oftener than in the usual routine of daily duties. We greet them upon social occasions when they are prepared to meet us with pleasant words and loving smiles.

Divine grace is not always required upon occasions like this to win the good opinion and approval of others. They often enough natural goodness about human beings to bring to the surface of their lives these genial graces which charm other eyes and win the respect and confidence of those with whom they come in contact.

Not so, however, in the every-day life. Divine grace alone can sustain the soul when the burden is heavy, and care and trial test us at every step. There is not enough moral strength in the heart of humanity to sustain it when the body is weary, and the poor, weak arms just ready to let fall the burden.

It is our every-day life that builds up our Christian character. It is our every-day life that determines whether we are to be a blessing or a curse to the world.

A holy every-day life is the constant practice of the divine principle which saves, lifts up, and elevates the human soul.—Presbyterian Observer.
