A Barones of Long Standing.

No sooner is the Cutting sensation pretty well exploded than Texas comes forward with what is represented as a genuine grievance, the case of an adopted citizen who was unlawfully given up by a Texan sheriff on a charge of horse stealing, and illegally executed for the same by the Mexican authorities. Gov. Ireland says that if Washington will not vindicate Texas the latter will protect herself. It might be a good idea to let the two States—Texas and Chihuahua—fight it out, as both appear to be blue-moulding for a fight. We would also suggest that the fishermen of New Bengland take a hand in the broil, and take their hands out of Canada's pockets.

No English Parliament has ever had such a variety of parties as the coming one will have. It will contain the Tories, the Whigs, the Gladstonian Liberals, the Radicals who outgliadstone Gladstone, the Chamberlain Liberals, the Irish Nationalists, and possibly the Irish Loyalists, whom Churchill has promised stronger fare than he may be able to make his English followers digest. The Welsh talk of forming a Home Rule party of their own, and the Scotch Crofters have aspirations in the same direction. If so many cooks do not spoil the broth there is no virtue in old proverbs.

The condition of a man's nerves is often betrayed in his writing, and also the fire of his temper. If he is slow and methodical he evoers a page with characters laboriously drawn out and a copiousness of ink that i defacing. A nervous man will either contract his signature into the smallest place possible or scrawl it out in flowing lines and big letters or write it phonetically. In either of the three cases it is generally impossible to decipher it. Business men to a certain extencultivate an original style of writing. Their correspondence is very large and their name often attached to valuable papers. A style psculiar to themselves, if rigidly followed out is one of the safeguards against forgery. But there are forgers as clever as business men who devise strange styles of penmanship.
