Notes for Speech on the international situation.

Certainty that the defeat of England and France would mean for the world the domination of principles and doctrines that are repugnant to the citizens of this country.

In the face of the magnitude of existing responsibilities of nations, we must consider that the past should be the past. We must look to the future and, as Canadians, try to discern what would be our fate, and the fate of mankind, should England be defeated.

Note also about isolations a myth.
