CLYDESDALES and HACKNEYS.

Another large importation will arrive in August. Mr. James Dalgety is now in Scotland for the purpose of selecting a better lot of horses than he ever before imported. Some of the lot have already been purchased, and include some extra big prizewinners. Others will come out that have made the season in Scotland. Intending purchasers should have this shipment in mind.

WITH THE RANCHMEN.

The growth of the cattle business in the Territories of late years has been marked by the same features of variety, complexity and perfection that characterize all our industrial pursuits. Hitherto it has been the case that the cattle business of Eastern and Western Canada has been in broad contrast, the East having had, to a greater or less extent, a monopoly of the pure-bred cattle business, and the West being given over to ranging. The east has been the source from which our bulls have been almost exclusively drawn. It is no doubt the case that the east, with its foundation stock built up on a steady stream of English importations, backed by the knowledge of good animals that belongs to the cultivated areas and by new experimental knowledge won during the pursuit of the art, has been adapted to the production of fine animals, and this class of stock has been a necessary complement to our range stock. It is the case, however, that the bringing of this stock on to the range has been attended with results in some degree unsatisfactory, and in many cases to flat, irreparable loss. The difficulty, of course, has been that of adjusting pampered stock to range life. It has been felt over and over again that the question of males for improvement and conservation of the standard of our range stock would have to be met within the country itself. For this purpose the producer of bulls has to keep two considerations in mind. The first is, that care and management must be directed to the producing of a type of bulls of equal size and excellence with eastern bulls; the second is that these should be produced in such a way as to make working on the range no hardship. It is scarcely to be expected that we can produce the molasses type without the molasses, but we can produce an animal by selection of the best possible animal form and that will suit our needs much better than the pampered animal, by reason of its capacity to adjust itself to our environment easily.

It was the possibility of doing this and the demand for the class of stock produced by this method that led to the founding of what its proprietor calls the Little Bow Stock Farm. Mr. J. T. Parker had already built up a good stock of range cattle, and had acquired a good knowledge of the range business in ten years' experience in ranching in the Lethbridge district. His experience with eastern bulls, however, and his liking for a real good animal, together with the promise of good rewards in the enterprise, led him to dispose of his range cattle and found a Hereford herd. His ranch is situated twenty miles from Lethbridge, on a bend of the Belly River, though the district is generally called the Little Bow country. His layout is one that commends it for his work. He has over 2,000 acres of fenced pasture, in freehold and leasehold together, situated on the south side of the river and sheltered by heavy cut banks on the opposite side and giving the best possible water privileges on his shore. The property is varied by ravines and coulees running back from the river that afford the best kind of shelter as well as a variety of grazing. In short, he has a variety of bench, bottom and coulee grazing that offers a luxuriance and variety in grazing that could scarcely be equalled, let alone surpassed, on a cultivated holding. An eight-roomed two-story house stands on the bank, and is flanked by commodious stables of modern equipment, as well as by roomy, well-sheltered sheds and large corrals and stock-yards. To supplement the grazing, Mr. Parker has about forty acres under cultivation, devoted to rye grass, already well caught, and to oats to be cut green. An experiment with five acres of turnips promises well. Grain-feeding is resorted to only in limited measure. Chopped oats and bran are fed in small rations to early-calving cows, or to keep up the flesh, heart and stamina of growing bulls. Though the enterprise is less than two years old, Mr. Parker has demonstrated the wisdom of the methods he is following. His yearling bulls are ready to work when they are ready to sell, and are in every way satisfactory

Blood will tell

When an animal is all run down, has a rough coat and a tight hide, anyone knows that his blood is out of order. To keep an animal economically he must be in good health.

DICK'S BLOOD PURIFIER

is a necessity where the best results from feeding would be obtained. It tones up the system, rids the stomach of bots, worms and other parasites that suck the life blood away.

Nothing like Dick's powder for a run down horse.
