We hear and read a lot about the increased cost of living—its causes—we all know its effect. The Canadian House of Commons has recently introduced an act providing for an investigation of combines, monopolies, etc., which may enhance prices, etc. The problem is to reduce our living expenses, and everybody is trying to solve it.

The business world has a problem to solve which is just as vital to your interests as the one mentioned above. How to get more business economically is a problem every business man wants to solve. This publication—Advertising and Selling—is trying to solve the great problem of economical distribution. That we are helping our readers is proven by the following quotation from letters received from our subscribers:

"Put us down for another subscription; this time to our Philadelphia office. Keep up this sort of work and we are with you."

"Where is my February copy? It did not come and I do not want to miss a number."

*"Enclosed is a cheque for $10.00. A. & S. for 1 year to our five branches listed below."
"Send bill for subscription and all copies from last June. A. & S. looks good to me."
"Am sending you $5.00 for three years' subscription. Your independent position should be recognized."*

The originals of these and many other letters can be seen in our office.

Advertising is recognized as one of the greatest economic forces to increase any business and advertising and sales managers and business men are realizing that Advertising and Selling is a magazine which is of great assistance to them no matter what their business is.

It is an absolutely independent magazine and therefore gives you frank, honest and unprejudiced opinions and ideas and pertinent subjects in its field.
