

Melt with soft Tuscan, glow with arms and lips
 Cream-white and crimson, making mock at reason.
 Thy balm on brows by care uneaten drips;
 I have thy favors but I fear thy treason.
 Fain would I hold thee by the dusk wing-tips
 Against a grievous season.

Ballade of the Poet's Thought

A POET was vexed with the fume of the street,
 With tumult wearied, with din distraught;
 And very few of the passing feet
 Would stay to listen the truths he taught;
 And he said,—“ My labour is all for naught;
 I will go, and at Nature's lips drink deep.”
 For he knew not the wealth of the poet's thought,
 Though sweet to win, was bitter to keep.

So he left the hurry, and dust, and heat
 For the free, green forest where man was not;
 And found in the wilderness' deep retreat
 That favour with Nature which he sought.
 She spake with him, nor denied him aught,
 In waking vision or visioned sleep,
 But little he guessed the wealth she brought,
 Though sweet to win, was bitter to keep.

But now when his bosom, grown replete,
 Would lighten itself in song of what
 It had gathered in silence, he could meet
 No answering thrill from his passion caught.
 Then grieving he fled from that quiet spot,
 To where men work, and are weary, and weep;
 For he said,—“ The wealth for which I wrought
 Is sweet to win, but bitter to keep.”

ENVOI

Oh, poets, bemoaning your hapless lot,
 That ye may not in Nature your whole hearts steep,
 Know that the wealth of the poet's thought
 Is sweet to win, but bitter to keep.
