April. Well, April fickle lass, you're here, With muddy shoe and cap of snow, Vith now a smile and now a tear, With first a kiss and then a blow.

You come with saucy flap of skirt, With pout of lip and roguish eye That mark you, April, for a flirt Who offers love but to deny. Clearance Sale

But then, dear April, we forgive
The follies of your wanton way;
You tend the flowers while you live,
And, dying, give them all to May.

HAPPILY RUINED.

Arthur Morton sat in his room in his hotel. He was a young man six and twenty, tall and slim frame, with a face of great intellectual beauty, dressed in co-stly garments, though his toilette was but indifferently performed.

He was an orphan, and for a time had lived at an hotel. It required but a single glance into his pale features to tell that he was an invalid. He sat with his bead reating upon his hands, and his whole frame would ever and anon tremble, as though with powerful emotion.

As the youth sat thus, his door was opened, and an elderly gentleman entered.

"Ah doctor, you are moving early"

"It aust. You will wait!"

Arthur walked home one evening to the house of a wealthy merchant, John Melbourne.

It was a palatial dwelling, and may a hopeful, happy hour had be spent beneath its roof. He rang the bell and was soon admitted to the parlor. In a few minutes Grace Melbourne entered.

"Weil," resumed Crosby, "Dr. Weston was the man. He had the money."

"How? What?" gasped Arthur, gazing from one to the other in blank astonishment.

Some words were spoken—many moments of painful silence ensued.
