Pretty Event at the Home of Mr. Wm. Wright, Wellington Street.

An exquisite home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. William Wright, 536 Wellington street, this afternoon, when Miss Margaret Wright, daughter of the late James Wright, was united in marriage to Mr. Stanford Ivey, of Toronto. The home was decorated with mar guerites and lilies of the valley, and presented a beautiful appearance. The ceremony was performed in the drawing-room, under a canopy of mar-guerites, the Rev. Canon Dann, of St Paul's Cathedral, officiating. The bride was dressed in a magnificent robe of real lace over chiffon satin, and wore the bridal veil caught with orange blossoms, and hemmed up with seed pearls. She was attended by Miss Anna McL. Smith, of Toronto, who wore pink Dresden chiffon over pink taffeta. Little Miss Margare Ivey, dressed all in white, with white chiffon poke bonnet, made a fairy-like flower girl. consumptive patients and told of many heart-rending instances where persons afflicted with the white plague were unable to secure proper treatment, or even a comfortable place in which to pass their last days, by reason of this fear. He makes a hit. The two Franciscoes are good, too. One does some clever tricks and the other exposes them. Harris and Dee Loss give an acrobatic tramp turn that is very fair: while Daly and Kelso please, and W. (Continued from page 1.)

thought that Edmonton has outstripped Calgary in political prestige and that his own career as a legislator in one of the new provinces is to be blighted by a long period in Opposition.

Premier Haultain, who speaks here tonight, will not tell his audience that the school clauses of the Autonomy Bill embody his own proposals, as submitted to Sir Wilfrid Laurier in a draft bill two years ago. He will not dwell on his statement that if he were dictator of the new provinces tomorrow, he would not change by one jet or tittle the school system in vogue there now and perpetuated by the Auonomy Bill. He will not touch on his real sore spot-namely that the erection of the territories into provinces will, very likely, deprive him of his occupation as Premier.

The west being indifferent, what about Ontario? If the school clauses constitute the grave crisis they are said to do-if they are coercion ever so slightly disguised-why it is that no man of light and leading has identified himself with the crisis to the extent of taking chances in a popular election? Toronto has been taking a large part in the discussion. Two newspapers have been screaming themselves hoarse in an effort to serve the country and put on more circulation in a city which is supposed to be Orange and Tory. There are Conservatives in London who say that Toronto forced this election on them. If Toronto was so anxious to tend to other people's knitting, why didn't it provide a candidate? Where is Billy Maclean, who was willing a few weeks ago to resign his seat in South York to run anywhere? It is within everybody's memory that the editor of the World was going round asking people to tread on the tail of his coat! Where is the tail of his coat now? It looks as if Quixote had renigged. The name of Mr. J. S. Willison occurs, an after-dinner speaker of great skill, a man of large attainments and tranchant opinions, a Titan among journalists, a Conservative who displays the fervor of recent conversion, a foremost opponent of coercion. Would the Conservative party have thought that he was butting in if he had agreed to run in London instead of Billy Gray?

The mountain labors and brings forth a mouse. Either Billy Gray is not as big as the crisis or the crisis is not as big as Billy Gray. To save everybody's feelings we lean to the latter view. Billy does not look like the man of destiny. The shoes are too big for him, and there's a lot of slack in the back of the coat. Of course, he may be the man, but the identification is far from complete. Greatness is not written on his forehead. There are no strawberry marks or other clues. It's easier to pick out a Grand Lama than a successful candidate. More than that, Billy has done some things that a great man, of long foresight, waiting his chance, marked him for her own, he would hardly have acted as strike-breaker in 1899 and knifed union labor, as he did. The great man looks far ahead. He knows how to say nothing and saw wood. Billy Gray, on the other hand, has made breaks. At a critical stage in his career he is at outs with the workingman.
