PANDEMONIUM IN BRITISH COMMONS

Turbulent Scene Caused by Reference to the Phoenix Park Murders.

London, April 21.—Memories of the turbulent scenes of Parnell's time occurred in the Commons tonight, during the discussion of a motion by T. P. O'Connor to reduce the civil service estimates by $4,500, the amount of Sir Robert Anderson's pension.

A New Idea in Medicine

Which Accounts for the Enormous Success of DR. A. W. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD.

To tear down the diseased tissues was the old principle of medicine. To cure by building up new, healthy tissues is the new method.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid illustration of the new method, for it cures by increasing the quantity and quality of the blood, by creating new nerve force, and by overcoming weakness and disease with new vigor, new energy and new vitality.

The time to begin using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is when strength fails you and you find yourself out of sorts and losing health and vigor. It is easy then to get back to normal condition by using this great restorative treatment. The blood is enriched, the nerves revitalized, new firm flesh and tissue is formed, and you feel the snap of new vigor as it is being instilled into your system.

Don't wait for nervous prostration, paralysis, but keep the system at high water mark. Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Fifty cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

NO PLACE FOR IT.

An Irishman visited a tuberculosis exhibit, where lungs in both healthy and diseased conditions were displayed preserved in glass jars. After carefully studying one marked "Cured tuberculosis lung," he turned to the physician and said:

"Perhaps it's because I'm Irish, but if ye cured 't' patient, how could ye have his lung in a bottle?"

HOW MR. ASQUITH STARTLED OPPOSITION

Unionists Did Not Think That Lords' Veto Measure Would Come Up.

London, April 6.—In the small hours of the morning small groups of tall-hatted people might have been seen hustling along Parliament street and through Trafalgar Square and the thoroughfares adjacent to the great Palace of Westminster. They were imperial legislators at long last let loose. The solitary figure stood at the corner of old Scotland Yard. It was an old journalistic friend of mine.

"Hello," I said, "what are you doing here?"

"That—House," he replied, nodding toward the great clock tower. "has only just risen, and I have lost my train and am trying to make up my mind what to do. I can't get a taxi. They don't care to take a single fare to the other side of Hampstead Heath. Sometimes by giving a trifle extra you can persuade one, but I've missed that chance." It was a despairing journalistic groan.

For myself I was provided for at the club. But I had only a shake down.

"Come along," I said, "and try what can be done."

It fell out that the night porter had got another shakedown in the basement of the great tower, and there my colleague sought repose.

Balfour Started.
This was but a sample of the horrible confusion into which everything had fallen, as a consequence of the fact that the Opposition had at last awakened to the fact that the Government meant business. So far, apparently, Mr. Balfour has not taken this veto question very seriously. And not unnatural has been his skeptical attitude. The privilege of the peers has seemed to him far too firmly rooted to be upset by such a coalition as the Government forces present.

Bill To Come.

But last night all this was changed. The Prime Minister moved his resolutions embodying a timetable for the discussion of the veto resolutions. The gist of the timetable was that the discussions should end on April 14. The great reason for this expedition was that after all the resolutions were merely preliminary to the introduction of a bill in all its stages, though the Prime Minister would not say that the discussion would not be limited in time also. But there should be no undue delay in putting the bill. Then, replying to Mr. Balfour, the Prime Minister intimated that the budget, too, should be finished before the recess.

Now Mr. Balfour had been under the impression that the House of Commons would see no veto bill. That was to come up in the Lords and be made an end of.

But when it appeared that the House of Commons was indeed to see the bill, Mr. Austen Chamberlain sprang into the arena and bade an eager welcome to it. Would the Government really proceed with the bill?

Assurance Given.

The Home Secretary, Mr. Winston Churchill, said certainly. The work of preparing the bill had been going on for a long time, and undoubtedly "it would be a very bold and a very foolish Government which asked the House of Commons to tramp for weary weeks and months round the lobbies, passing all the stages of a bill embodying these resolutions, unless they saw a fair and reasonable prospect that at the end it would not be treated in the contemptuous and unceremonious manner in which so much of the legislation of the previous Parliament had been treated."

Cat Out of Bag.

Then the cat was supposed to be out of the bag. And yet it was not a very decided cat. It was doubtful if it was a cat at all. The point was that the Opposition were under the impression that there was a difference between the Prime Minister and the Home Secretary. Hurriedly, the Prime Minister and Mr. Balfour were "sent for"—they had both left the House. Mr. Asquith came back to say that there was no such difference. The bill must be passed through all its stages in both Houses before it could become law. That was obvious and he had said it before.

"But do not let it go forth for a moment that I have pledged myself that whatever happens we are going to prosecute the bill through all its stages in this House. I said weeks ago that we were not going to plow the sands, and if it becomes perfectly clear—I need not indicate the ways on which it might—that to prosecute the bill through its later stages would be a mere waste of parliamentary time and energy, his majesty's Government are not going to commit themselves and the House of Commons to anything so futile."

This was the statement that showed Mr. Balfour that the Government had no intention whatever of countenancing those prolonged discussions with their endless chances of something turning up on which Mr. Balfour had relied. The Attorney-General made the point clearer still by declaring in reply to Lord Hugh Cecil that in the event of the House of Lords rejecting the resolution and so saying it would not pass a bill founded thereon, the House of Commons would not go on discussing the bill month after month. Subsequently the Prime Minister remarked that he would not say whether the House of Commons would even take the second reading of the bill irrespective of the fate of the resolutions in the House of Lords.

ENTRANCE OF REGENTS

Unique and Impressive Ceremony in the Republic of San Marino.

London, April 21.—Twice a year, on April 1 and Oct. 1, an old and picturesque ceremony known as the ingress, or entrance, is repeated in the small republic of San Marino, when the two regents, or captains of the commonwealth, assume office.

The mode of election of the two regents, who in the statutes of 1200 are styled consuls and in the latter statutes defenders or captains, and the formalities to be observed on their accession, date from the year 1224. On March 15 and Sept. 15 of every year the names of twelve members of the grand council of the republic are drawn by lot, and each of these nominators must designate a person worthy to be charged with the government. The twelve names are submitted to the grand council and a vote is taken on each name.

The names of the six candidates who have the largest number of votes are then written down in couples on three pieces of paper, which are placed in an urn. The urn is then carried to the cathedral, escorted by a guard of honor, and all the members of the council, headed by the regents, and after mass has been celebrated and special prayers said a boy draws from the urn one slip of paper, and the names written on it are those of the new regents, who must accept office or pay a fine of 100 and be declared traitors to their country.

On the day they assume office they are escorted to the Palazzo Valloni, where the majordomo introduces into their presence the religious, civil and military authorities. Then the two regents, surrounded by the noble guards with drawn swords, proceed to the state palace, where they are received by the old regents, who join in the procession and go to the cathedral. High mass and a Te Deum are sung, and the procession returns to the palace, where speeches are made by the rector of the university and by the youngest student, who both exhort the new regents to govern well and safeguard the liberty of the republic.

A secretary then reads a Latin formula, and the new regents are sworn on the statutes of the republic, whereupon the old regents hand to their successors the state seals and the keys of the city gates and fortress. The new regents are then enthroned, and all the officials present, beginning from the old regents, render them homage, while the band plays the national hymn and a salute of 101 guns is fired from the fortress.

A CLIMBING RECORD.

Kingston, St. Vincent, British West Indies, April 21.—Norman, famous Scotch traveller and Alpine climber, and former member of the British Parliament, ascended the Soufriere volcano last Tuesday in one hour and fifty minutes, establishing what is said to be a record in point of time occupied. He also climbed the northern lip at an altitude of 4,700 feet, and accomplished a circuit of the crater.

CURED OF CONSTIPATION

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many ills that constipation brings in its train. Medicine after medicine I have taken in order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c. a box.
