

never attend the house of God. Mr. Hamilton has been very successful in reaching this numerous class. In this little book he gives us his experience, and his philosophy of the subject deduced therefrom. He is a very racy writer and evidently a "live" man. In another number we shall give copious extracts from his book. No pastor, we think, can read it without getting valuable suggestions therefrom. The writer has suffered considerable persecution on account of his gospel-raids into Satan's territory. He quotes with an utter frankness the most adverse as well as most favourable criticism of his methods.

Conrad; A Tale of Wiclif and Bohemia. By EMMA LESLIE. 12mo., pp. 293. New York: Phillips and Hunt; and Methodist Book Rooms, Toronto, Montreal, and Halifax. Price, $1.50.

Margarette; A Tale of the Sixteenth Century. By EMMA LESLIE. Illustrated, 12mo, pp. 324. Same publishers and same price.

Cecily; A Tale of the English Reformation. By EMMA LESLIE. Illustrated, 12mo, pp. 324. Same publishers and same price.

We have here three additional volumes of the admirable Church History series previously reviewed in this magazine. It is sometimes difficult to get young people interested in the great epochs of history and in the great men of the past. That difficulty is largely overcome by books such as these. The periods and characters have been carefully studied, and then, by the exercise of the historic imagination, the breath of life is breathed into the dry bones of history, and the great actors in the drama of the ages are made to move and act and speak before us. The curiosity of the young is thus stimulated, and they are led to inquire and verify the statements in standard books of history. We attribute very largely our own fondness for historic reading and research to an early familiarity with the pages of Sir Walter Scott.

Of course work of this sort, to be useful and not misleading, needs to be well done; and such, we are happy to say, is eminently the case with the volumes under review. Miss Leslie has studied the best historical authorities and has, so far as we are able to judge, taken no unwarrantable liberty with the historic facts. But she has suffused the whole with the graceful play of her own fancy, and filled up the outlines and details of her sketches in a manner that gives a much truer, because more vivid, conception of the periods treated than many so-called histories.

No periods could be more important in the evolution of religious liberty and of the Protestant Reformation than those treated in these volumes. The noble characters of Wiclif, Chaucer, Huss, Luther, Zwingle, Hooper, Latimer and other heroes of the Reformation are vividly pictured, and to the youthful reader they are no longer mere names but living men by whose heroic spirit and example they can hardly fail to be ennobled and inspired. The minor characters are also very skillfully drawn and contribute to give life to the picture. The religious teachings are most salutary and impressive. The books are handsomely illustrated and elegantly bound. The whole series, nine in number, would be a valuable addition to any Sunday-school or a charming present from any father to his children. These books, we may say, form part of the Church Lyceum course.

Pastor and People; or, Methodism in the Field. By the Rev. J. H. POTTS. 16mo, pp. 278. New York: Phillips and Hunt and Methodist Book Concerns. Price, $1.25.

Mr. Potts is one of the accomplished editors of the Michigan Christian Advocate. He is a man of clear perceptions, of strong convictions and of forcible expression.