

(i) The classification of scientific experiments and opportunities across causes. Today a University Professor does not have the time or opportunity to study theoretical issues of philosophy or physics - just was not always true.

(ii) An advance of our scientific methods in the increasing number of theoretical scientists now available.
Canadian Institutions of science must be paid more.
They come to see how not just institutions - just is the rest of some scientific organization.

(iii) Other indications of the scientific society Canadian institutions are the friendly cooperation which now exists between various scientific bodies, the increases in individual researches and between government departments, University and Industrial societies.

Mr. Christie, my friend coming was paid first last November in Canadian science and the last twice since 1933.

While this revolution took place in a world crisis, as only a country could fit it, "is now by far the most widespread throughout the world's economy, which will continue over the years to expand and prosper.

I believe first the Kelvin Medal was awarded to John Macmillan in 1923 (and subsequently to the first member of a Canadian American) because of his outstanding contribution in the field of Kondorov resonance and its development.

I am, naturally, extremely proud that the best scientific figure in this movement should be the Kelvin Medal, but I am especially proud that I am now a member of a most special and co-operative team, which is part of Canadian science, industry, and business, and public service,

If it is no honor of a Kelvin Medal - if it is more fitting for me to bequeath my name to something that more closely reflects my work.

I thank you from the bottom of my heart for this evening's demonstration to your friends and for the Honorary Membership in your Institution, which is the highest tribute of your professorial respect, and I take this opportunity to thank you for your kind hospitality.
