Unless Toronto and the towns interested in the proposed short route make a strong case before the Government and urge their claims as forcibly as possible, it is not likely that this section of the country will get what it is entitled to. A few months ago a great deal of interest was manifested in this question by various bodies and municipalities. We trust that the enthusiasm then aroused in the project will not be permitted to die out.

The Fifteen Cent Bylaw. The Fifteen Cent Bylaw.

Editor World: I notice in a report of a recent meeting of the Trades and Labor Council the following in reference to Aid. Crane's intention to offer a motion in Council to rescind the fifteen-cent bylaw: "We will stand no monkeying with the fifteen-cent bylaw." The aiderman who votes to rescind that just law bids a long farewell to public life."

Tenderness for the poor workingman was rescind that just law bids a long farewell to public life."

Tenderness for the poor workingman was of course the pretext for the enactment of this bylaw, but to suppose that the author did not really know that he might as well have attempted to legislate value into a bushel of potatoes or a barrel of flour, is almost too absurd for belief; and whether it was the effect upon the next city election that was really the main object in view, is the question that naturally arises. The bylaw was an example of fool legislation, easier to start than to remedy after once put in motion, which has resulted directly contrary to what might have been expected, and which, until rescinded, goes on from bad to worse.

I venture to say that there is hardly a member of the City Council who is not privately of the opinion that the fitteencent bylaw is a most iniquitous and disastrous plece of municipal legislation, but I presume it is equally true that there is screely a member of the Council who would dare to act in accordance with his honest conviction in taking active part in the movement to wipe it out of existence. Whether Ald. Crane will proceed with his motion in face of this threat remains to be seen.

That this wretched bylaw has had the Mayor Fleming's fifteen-cent bylaw is now felt by a number of laboring men who have hitherto had employment on the street when any work was in progress. Yester day about 50 old men, who represented 400 others, called on the City Engineer and complained that they could get no work from the contractors. Assistant Engineer Rust informed them that he was powerless in the matter." On another occasion Aid Jones drew a sad picture of many old citizens left without employment. Aid. Cransaid that the omission of these men was due to the passing of the fifteen-cent bylaw, which he described as the worst law ever passed by the Council. He, too, was cognizant of many cases of hardship of old citizens. The contractor has no use for the old, the cripple and the weak. The effect of the bylaw is to prevent the employment of men whose labor is not worth 15 cents an hour." Unfortunately this class of men are without much influence, have no organization, and consequently do not count with the average alderman when he estimates his chances for re-election. It is the Trades and Labor Union he fears, and the Union warns him not to "monkey" with the fifteen-cent bylaw, and the warning will no doubt be heeded.
