

LOUIS NAPOLÉON'S FOREIGN POLICY.

Some curiosity, and some uneasiness is manifested on the part of the public in various quarters, to divine what is likely to be the policy of Louis Napoleon in regard to Foreign Affairs.

The French Government has not given to the world since the 21st December of 1851, any official and official pledges of its respect for treaties and its desire of peace which commonly follow the accession of any new Power.

It is not true that no demands whatever have been made on the part of the Government of France, among its own subjects, towards the rest of Europe, to insure the maintenance of the policy.
