NEARLY DROWNED

A young man and his two sisters had a narrow escape from drowning yesterday afternoon on the river near Bellefleur Point, when their canoe was overturned by a squall. Deane Gandy, in one small boat, and Chester Gandy and Mr. Purdy, in another boat, heard the cries for help, hastened to the scene and rescued the unfortunate ones.

SOLDIERS' BADGES

To the Editor of The Times: Sir,—I was asked by a prominent business man to explain for what the badge I was wearing was issued. The first, a class A service badge, I explained was issued because I had been in the actual theatre of war and had seen actual action service. The second, a badge C, I explained that I had served with the Second Canadian Division on active service. While I was in conversation with him one passed wearing the C.H. badge. This man had seen service in nothing but the Canadian militia some years ago and had not deemed khaki at all. Another passed wearing a Class A service badge. He Inform me that he had left Canada on Dec. 26, 1918 and had been to Vladivostok, but had never been out of St. John until after the armistice was signed.

He told me that he and all his comrades who went to Russia had been issued with a war service badge marked for "service at the front." A third passed and passed to speak to us. He also was wearing a Class A service badge "for service at the front." I had met him in England on several occasions during leave from my battalion in France and up to the time I came home he had not been out of England. I asked him how long he had been in France and he replied that he had gone over after the armistice was signed.

I printed my little brass badge because I thought it was issued by the government as a distinguishing mark of appreciation of those who had stood in the trenches and done their little bit to keep the Hun from advancing but since I have seen them passed out indifferently I shall put mine away that I may not have to waste my time listening to tales of derring-do performed by my "comrades" who participated only in the triumphant march to Germany and the glorious occupation of Vladivostok after the war was over.
